Poetry.

Written for the Columbia Spy.
Working for the Lord.
(For the Sunday School Children.)

BY EVA ALICE.
Sister, did our teacher say
That little children, too, should pray,
That we were laborers in our way,
"Working for the Lord?"

Yes, dear Lillie, you and I
And every little child should try
To lay up treasures for the sky,
To seek for God's reward.

Little children should be meek,
Little hands-like mine are weak,
Lips and tongues might idly speak,
And cause the Saviour pain.

But dear sister, day by day
We can walk the narrow way,
Can live and learn, watch and pray,
"Then duty will be plain."

God has a part for each to do,
For every being, I and you,
The path of duty to pursue
To redeem a world from sin.

For wicked man, God's Son hath died,
For all mankind His blood was shed,
We work with Christ our living head,
In winning souls to Him.

Though our talents may be few,
Something for Jesus, all can do,
We can help our Saviour, too,
Each, some aid afford.

As little soldiers in the fight,
Let us keep our armor bright,
Ever battling for the right,
"Working for the Lord."

When our labors here, shall cease,
And at last we find release,
For old and young, there's perfect peace
Th' victory's won;

We then shall hear that blessed word,
"Ye faithful servants of your Lord,
Come up—receive thy great reward,
Well done."

Original

Letter from Oregon.
WIND MOUNTAIN, Jan. 20th, '66.

MR. EDITOR—Dear Sir:—I suppose you have begun to think by this time, (if you have not ceased to think of me entirely,) that the cougars or rats have run away with me, as it has been three months since I wrote. I "still live" cougars and rats notwithstanding, and as it is too cold and uncomfortable to be round much to-day, I have drawn the table close to the fire, which is roaring and crackling in the big fire place, and I have seated myself with my feet to warm it, and am going to spend a portion of the day in "taking notes."

They may become "worthless" by the time they get across the "big seas," or they may "go down," and some of the mermaids may find them, and use them to roll their hair on, or, to light their fires with, &c. But I will take notes, and send them on their way to "America" whether they "go down" or "up" and you know "when a woman will she will, &c."

I propose now in this letter, to show up some of the features of Oregon, as far as I have observed them. The honorable party who passed thro' here last summer have given to the public an admirable and correct description of the country, but they were here in the most favorable season to examine and report favorably. Their letters now would relate to thermometers, furs, and perhaps frozen toes. I lean to the belief, that one "must summer and winter a body to find him out." I have summered and wintered Oregon, and I confess to know but little about him, yet I know enough to know that, one can not "dress in linen the year round," as I was led to believe one could, before I came out—from the statement of some who had been here. Winter clothing, furs, &c., are worn, and needed as much here as they are in New England not "left out in the cold." For instance, I was told thermometer changed not more than ten degrees the year round. I have known it to change from 28 to 41° in one day, and it ranges from 10° or more below zero in winter to 110° in summer. "Ten degrees" indeed! Last winter the cold did not set in till 10th of January. The morning of the 10th, thermometer went 10° below zero. Up to that day everything was green and flourishing. Thermometer averaging 50°; and at once it went to 8° below zero, and only twice was it below. I kept a record of the changes each day, and it looks up as follows:—Average for Jan., 26° above zero, twice below it. Feb. 36°, March 41°, April 55°, May 65° June 70°. I could give you the rest of the year, but a Dutchman who stopped here one night, stole my diary where I happened to put the rest of the record, and it cannot be told you, but it grew warmer, of course, and 104° in shade is the highest I remember of noting down. In this place, where there are high winds, with not more than a few hours respite and only semi-occasionally at that, the year around, we do not feel the heat of summer as much at 104° as in the east at 80°, but they make the winter ten fold colder, to the

The Hasheesh Eater.

De Quincy has given to the world, in graphic language, the experience of an opium-eater. A correspondent of the Erie Dispatch gives a lengthy sketch of his experience in hasheesh eating, hasheesh being a resinous gum partaking largely of the subtle character of the drug which has been the bane of China.—From this last "confession" we quote as follows:

"The effect which hasheesh has upon the imagination must depend in a great measure upon the temperament and constitutional disposition of the subject.—Some tell us that they never rise above the earth, but have visions of beautiful women, choice and delicious viands, and if they behold a river it is a river of sparkling wine. Others experience the pleasant odor of flowers, and seem to be revelling among the gardens of roses and among bowers of woodbine and honeysuckles, or listening to the most sublime and heavenly music.

"For my own part I never had any idea of getting so high above the earth and of roving among the regions of space, either with or without the aid of hasheesh, or I might add, of any other influence; and I can only attribute such an experience to a fondness for seeing the world, which I have ever cherished, and which I am happy to say, has at least been gratified without incurring any greater expense than that of a pill of the immortal hasheesh, and at no greater sacrifice of time than will be consumed in reading this article, although I saw the sun rise and set fourteen times during my extraordinary voyage.

"While under the influence of hasheesh a man has no idea of time or distance.—As I have just said, I saw the sun rise and set fourteen times and imagined my voyage consumed fourteen days. The time consumed was actually about two hours. In bringing my hand to my head, I frequently felt as if I was lifting it up out of the depths of earth to the height of heaven, and was positive in several instances that the distance was several hundred miles.

"The sensations which a person experiences when in this state is that of a perfect freedom from all mental and bodily pain. The spirits are buoyant, and the curiosity is constantly pleased and excited by the rapid succession of thousands of pleasing colors, visions and landscapes."

Tubular Boilers.

The last number of the Scientific American contains the following remarks on tubular boilers:

It is not the part of wisdom to denounce tubular boilers because some passengers leave the boats fitted with them. As well might every one stop traveling on railroads, as all locomotives are tubular boilers of a much more dangerous type than those which have exploded. Tubular boilers make steam so much cheaper and more rapidly than common return-flue or cylinder boilers that they should be used everywhere when they can be. In all places where fuel is scarce we find them in all cities, in railways, steamers, steam fire-engines, and in factories—wherever, in short steam is used as a motive power.

It is too late in the day to deny them, and they will eventually find their way into general use on the Mississippi river, as they have in all other countries. In the steam fire-engines are tubular boilers where the tubes are only three-fourths of an inch in diameter, and the space between one-fourth of an inch and the fire is so forced by the draft and exhaust that the blaze comes out at the top.—One hundred and eighty, two hundred, and much higher working pressures, are carried, and they are in use all over the country every day, for hours at a time; they don't explode unless neglected.

A COSTLY BRIDGE.—When Pemberton's retreating forces burned down Big Blackriver bridge, two divisions of our pursuing columns, unprovided with pontoons, improvised their own crossing.—Great quantities of baled cotton were stored near the river. By means of cables extending across the river the bales were fastened to each other in the water, two in width, until a sufficient number was used to float a superstructure of spring pieces and plank, on which the troops and trains crossed the next day.—The bridge was built in one night, and the men worked by short reliefs and lighted by large fires on the shores.—The lumber used in its construction was obtained from a cotton gin which stood near by. The material used in this perishable structure was estimated at one hundred and forty thousand dollars value in New York.

COLDS IN THE HEAD.—As this is the season for these troublesome and annoying little maladies, a remedy pointed out by the French Hospital Gazette, may be of interest and use on this side of the Atlantic. It consists in inhaling the tincture of iodine by holding a vial of the tincture under the nose. The warmth of the hand volatilizes the tincture. It is to be thus breathed at intervals of three minutes, and the malady is soon conquered.

—Madame Gaisi's contract not to sing in London for five years has expired, and there are reports of her reappearance there in opera.
