Another Day. BY J. WILLIAM VAN NAMEE, Another day has passed away And brought me nearer home, Nearer the grave, so cold and gray, Nearer the jasper throne, Another day of toil and care

Reckoned with the past, And I can see the shadows where The sunbeams lingered last. Another day of shifting scenes In life's dramatic page, And yet my heart so fondly leans To things of this world's age. I know I'm drawing near the dark And ever flowing stream of death. And yet I fail to steer my back.

I let it drift with every breath. Another day, a mile-stone passed On life's probation here, Another lengthened shadow cast Toward life's sunset there. Each day I'm nearer the dark grave Nearer the judge of all. Oh, may I live the life to save,

And heed stern duty's call.
