Written for the Columbia Spy. To the Memory of Lieut.-General Winfield Scott.

BY EVA ALICE. A great and mighty Chief has fled; A Nation mourns a cherished son; The Patriot, Hero, Christian,—dead!

His battles o'er,-the victory won. ~ So full of honors and of years, Enough for tottering house of clay;
By all beloved—midst friendship's tears— How sweet to pass from earth away.

His life, to all, is known full well, Beyond the seas they speak his name, The historic page doth proudly tell-There brightly shines our Hero's fame

Toll out ye bells your solemn peals; From East to West, from North to South Let sorrow which a Nation feels Boom from the mighty cannon's mouth. Furl up the banner of the free

Our Country's flag, flag of our Chief-Which oft heied to victory-Fit emblem to be draped in grief. Fold it around the easket fair, Fit for his rest "his chosen spot" 'Twill ever float above him there-

That glorious flag, the flag of Scott

THE TRIUMPH.

A Sketch from Real Life. "What men call tack Is the prerogative of valiant souls, The fealty life pays its rightful lords. These balmy, beautiful, moonlight whispered: evenings in "leafy June" recall to memory a thousand dear, but, till now, almost forgotten, scenes and associations of the past. I look out from my window upon the fields of waving grain, and see them swaying beneath the breath of the evehonored. ning zephyr, while they are all bathed in a flood of silver light. I think of what the past leath been to me-I recount its brief sunny hours when my heart knew nothing of life's trials, and when I used to wonder what there was in man's heart that made him dissatisfied with himself, with his condition and with the world. I can recall the memory of one whose love and friendship was twined around my being, and while I pen this article, it seems as though his presence were yet with me-as though I looked upon his countenance, flushed with health and radiant with that manly beauty which bespeaks a noble lineage. But he is not that he lay motionless upon the bed, while here. I have not listened to the silvery weeping friends surrounded the couch. tones of his voice for years. But I have the pleasure of reading, occasionally, those elegant transcripts of his mind which have been given to the public journals, as well as those still deeper, calmer thoughts that mark his epistolary correspondence. He was a good and apt little boy, an industrious and persevering youth; a bold, fearless and uncompromising man. In the school room he was noted for his correct recitations, no less than for his attention to his studies,-for his politeness and amiability to his schoolher heart would break, and still clinging mates, and for his unanswering obedience to the idea that he could not be dead. to his teachers. which has just occurred in that city, showing that fact is sometimes stranger than fiction, if not so romantic: A young German, recently married to handsome lady of very respectable parentage, was taken suddenly ill at his place of business on Friday. He was placed in a carriage and taken to his residence on Eric street, where he laid in great agony until Sunday, when the dis-

To all appearances he was dead and it was so decided. Arrangements were about to be made for the interment, when the young wife, feeling she could not give him up so soon, insisted that the funeral be postponed until Tuesday morning. To gratify the woman thus brought so speedily to mourn the loss of her husband, the funeral was postponed .- The disconsolate wife spent most of the day on Monday in the same room with the corpse, weeping as though
