Change. Change is written every where, In this world of ours; Every leaf is growing, changing,

Buds all change to flowers Where upon the sunny hillside, Strawberries used to grow, Now through pine trees, tall and sombre, June's soft breezes blow.

Where that used to stand a forest, When I was a child, Late I wandered;—eorn was growing, Anda garden smiled. Change,- we see it all around us; Shall we changeless be? Human minds be bound and shackled, While all else are free?

Shall we to the dead past clinging, Still refuse the light, Groping blindly in the darkness, Of our spirit's right? Nay, instead we'll seek to copy, Nature's better plan, Ever changing, growing, learning More of God and man. Nothing will we count too sacred, In Truth's scales to try; "Infidel, ' though, some may call us, What care you or I?

Life-it were not worth the living. If we still must stay, Changeless in our father's footsteps, Plodding day by day. And a blest change yet awaits, When shall cease our breath,

Still our minds shall be unfolding;

That change men call death. And forever, and forever, In another sphere. Living-learning-still aspiring. Let's be faithful here.

Miscellaneous. The Fatal Wedding Present. "Oh what a beautiful pair of cut-glass decanters, and a dozen wine-glasses to match! How very kind of Uncle John to give us such a pretty and useful present, Mark," said Mary trimly to her husband, as they took possession of their neat little their marriage, and were busy unpacking their presents. "Yes indeed," she added, putting the sparkling crystal on the table, "they are very good and pretty." "Not very useful, though to us," re plied her husband. "Why I don't see that," replied the young wife ... "We certainly are not in but when we have our friends to see us, put something on the table for them to them useful."

"It is a foolish custom, Mary," said "Ah, well,maybe so but it is a custom. and we can't look strange, and be indifferent to others. Every one, with any

Mark was not convinced, but he yielded, for a young husband would scarcely dispute the wishes of his bride about household management at the very beginning of married life. They both knew that very great economy would be needed in order to live respectably and honestly. Mark trimly was a clerk in a commercial house in the great metropolis, with but a small salary. His wife was an orphan who had inherited a small legacy by the sum had furnished their pretty home, and part, and only a part of the miserable death of a widowed mother-that little given them a clear start in the world,-The connections of both were in what is called good circumstances. Mary's mother had possessed a life annuity that enabled her to live in comfort, and out of which the legacy had been saved; the rest of her personal property had gone to a sonin-law in the West, to whose house the young couple had been making their wedding trip. Mark was one of a large family, the father and sons of which were all en- and only a few cinders smoulder in the gaged in public offices, or commercial grate; Mary's dress is torn, her feet in pursuits, and though none had a large the mud that covers her husband's clothes. income, yet while they live I all together, It is his only suit, and how is she to get a very good house and table, and a large them ready for him to wear with any circle of acquaintances had been kept decency at his employment? How is up. Neither Mark nor Mary were quite aware, that they must begin in rather a Reader this is no fancy sketch. A dreary lot is theirs, who are the slaves of appearances; who want to make five or six hundred dollars a year look like ten or twelve hundred. In nine cases out of ten all real comfort is sacrificed in the struggle-it is well if debt and disgrace, quarreling and heart-ache, do not close the scene. Young Mr. and Mrs. Trimley had no sooner settled themselves in their new home, than they resolved to invite their friends, and a large and pleasant tea-party they might have had at a moderate expense; but the bride remembered what Mrs. So-and-so had at her party, and so of course, the wine decanters and glasses must come forth .-"How could wedding-cake come on without wine?" she asked, as her husband with a sigh wished his "salary was raised." "The first party was the key-note to the tune the young people had to play .-The wine was praised and drank-a great deal more of it than Mary had reckoned on-and then sours of the elders complained that the wine did not "fully agree with them." The cold winter night was commented on, and Mark, now that prudence was lulled to sleep by his visits to the beautiful decenter, called for spirits and hot water, and there was brewing of punch, and mixing of toddy, and making of hot negus, until eyes that had looked bright, began to be misty, and voices sounded thick and loud, and Mary's smart party separated, some foolish, some cross. all very well disposed next day to say must do as others do." house at Mott Haven, a fortnight after Now let us look at this young couple one year after their first party. It is long past midnight, there is the sound of wheels in the quiet street; a carriage stops at the door, and the bell is pulled violently. As soon as the street door is opened, the driver helps out a young man, who cannot stand, and with the aid of the young woman at the door, he is pulled through the passage into the parlor, and laid on the sofa. My fare is we must of course do as others do, and ten shillings, ma'am!" says the driver. The pockets of the helpless drunkard are drink health and prosperity to us in; emptied and there is five shillings found. The wife searched her own pockets, and these beautiful decanters and glasses will look so neat and genteel. So I call counts up some shillings, routed out of her work box and writing desk; still she is s shilling short, and the driver, by no means sober, begins to abuse her-in her fright, to stop his clamor she gives him her little pencil-case instead of a shilling and hastens to shut out one torment .--She has no sooner done this than a voice pretence to gentility, brings out a little from the stair-case calls to her. " Mrs. Trimly, I give you notice, I cannot live
