Poetry.

Written for the Spy. In The Hospital. BY EVA ALICE.

"O sing that plaintive song again, Those passive strains that memories bring, They soothe my sorrows, ease my pain— O sing once more, sweet angel sing!"

It was the song my mother sang, The strains that told her boy to rest, As round her neck I fondly cling, My weary head upon her breast.

A mother's love! a mother's kiss! Sweet thoughts came stealing o'er the brain, My childhood's home! sweet hours of bliss! In memory, oh! how bright again!"

These lips, no more, her cheeks will press; Those arms, no more, around her clung; Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing! Sing!

O sing again! sweet angel sing!

These tears!—all I let the soldier weep— "The care can soothe, but not restore, I feel death's coldness, and no more, Lady, oh! sweet—will be over."

As fighter grows this fleeting breath, His thin
