Gas, Gas, Gas.

Gas, Gas, Gas.

Mr. Editor.—"A consumer of gas," pertinently asks, "are we completely at the mercy (?) of the Columbia Gas Company?" I answer, not at all. No one is compelled to consume gas. All can use it, that pay for it, or they can use whatever else they prefer. The Company have no desire to force their gas upon any on . All know the terms upon which it is furnished. If the price is too high, consumers will refuse it as they do other things they do not want. The relations between the Company and the consumer are those of seller and buyer, as the business of the Company is the manufacture and the sale of gas. The one is not bound to sell and of gas. The one is not bound to sell and the other is not bound to buy. Therefore "Consumer" is informed, that the Corpor-L. Getz, R. A. Gile, John Hays, J. C. Lægers, H.
