In this connection we would submit those well-known remedies—

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN TONIC. PREPARED BY DR. C. M. JACKSON PHILADELPHIA, PA. Twenty-two years since they were first introduced into this country from Germany, during which time they have undoubtedly performed more cures, and benefited suffering humanity to a greater extent, than any other remedies known to the public.

HOOFLAND'S GERMAN BITTERS,

These remedies will effectually cure Liver Complaint, Jaund ice. Dyspepsia, Chronic Nervous Diarrhea, or Dis Poblility, Chronic ease of the Kidneys, and all diseases arising from a Disordered Liver, Stometh, or Entertimes DEBILITY,

Resulting from any Cause whatever; Pro-tration of the System, induced by Severe Labor, Hardships, Ex-posure, Fevers, &c. There is no medicine extant equal to these remedies in such cases. A tone and vigor is imparted to the whole system, the appetite is strengthened, food is enjoyed, the stomach digests promptly, the blood is purified, the complexion becomes sound and healthy, the yellow tinge is eradicated from the eyes, a bloom is given to the cheeks, and the weak and nervous invalid becomes a strong and healthy being. There is no medicine extant equal to thes

DR. JACKSON—Dear Sir: I have been frequently requested to connect my name with recommendations of different kinds of medrecommendations of different kinds of medicines, but regarding the practice as out of my appropriate sphere, I have in all cases declined; but with rious in stances. I have in all cases a clear proof in various in stances. In my own family, of man Bitters, I depart for once from my usual course, to express my full conviction that, for general debitity of the system, and especially for Liver Complaint, it is a safe and valuable preparation. In some cases it may fail; but usually, I doubt not, it will be very beneficial to those who suffer from the above causes. Yours, very respectfully, Ode to Fontenai. From the French of De Chaulier BY E. H. S. O Fontenal! sweet solitude!

Of calm and peace the home; Loved spot! where never come Life's tumult and inquietude! Shall I, who, with my lyre's sweet strains,

And Beauty's power, indite No songs to thee, no soft refrains? 'Tis thou who bring'st me joy and peace Thou caim'st my moved heart, And of dread sorrow's smart Thou gently bid'st the painings cease.

Among these woods and hamlets dear.

Have sung Love's magic might

My boyhood's days were spent, On pleasure's joys intent: I've roamed the flowery meadows here, The Court no more can dazzle me. Free from its yoke so rude, Its baneful servitude, I'll sing no more its witchery O place of grandeurs, yet of pains, Your falseness I have known, And from afar bemoan The lures that form your golden chains Grotto! whence that pellucid stream; Adorned with moss and flowers, Maintains my pensive hours, With its soft murmur, like a dream.

To thee I turn for all the lov That common life besto To thee for that repose Thy freshness gives without alloy.

Here, what a joy o'er life is cast! Each day, attired anew With treasures, to my view Seems brighter, lovelier than the last At noonday, when, o'er field and glade,

The sun pours down athwart, How pleasant 'tis to court At eve, to hear the far-off rocks Re-echo to the notes Of music from the throats

Of joyous shepherds with their flocks. But ah! these bright and peaceful days Too swiftly pass away;
My slowness cannot stay
Their hurried course and onward ways. Old age comes on with rapid stride.

And death shall soon arrest The life with which I'm blest, Whose power I'll fight with hopeless pride O Fontenai! from that dear place Where first I saw the light,

Soon join my sires in Death's embrace Miscellaneous Beading.

Soon I shall take my flight,

BY GEORGE BROWN. Among those who lingered around a Mexican wagon train, that was about to start on a long and varied journey over the wild, beautiful plains to the recent civilization beyond, was a boy about fourteen years old, possessed of a handsome face radiant with intellect and health; he was rather tall for his age, and slender, and was carry-in his right head that alticle of amuse-ment known among school boys as "a shinny." This young boy was listening eagerly to the narrations of an old leatherclad man with one eve and long grey hair, who was giving an account of remarkable adventures and hair-breadth escapes, that formed the greater part of his thirty years xperience in the far West, to a group of his younger and less experienced companons, some of whom were reclining in stal worth grace on the gently curling grass, others hanging in picturesque attitude on the necks of favorite nules, or exposing only their stalworth calves and moccasins out of the back end of a high-topped Mexi-The radiant face of the youthful listener ecame more radiant still during the relation of a particularly thrilling adventure, and when the old grizzled narrator reached the climax of the story, when the brandished tomphawk was about to descend anon his weather-hardened skull-but did not, when the glittering knife was on the point of entering his crusty heart-but did not, the eyes of the boy dilated through absorbing interest, and he involuntarily followed with his "shinny" the motions which the

It was a beautiful day in May, the sun appear hazy and indistinct, so that the vast plains stretching like a sea towards the still farther West, seemed dim and vision-

The tales of the old trapper, the jocund laughter of the teamsters, the picturesque Mexican wagons with their high tops and long line of oxen, each had its charm for the boy, and each gentle breeze that came rippling from the west was laden with imaginary war-whoops, roars of the buf-faloes, and other wild sounds belonging to that dim land beyond the horizon. Our young boy, whom we will now introfanciful idea of running away from home, and going along with this wagon-train, He had heard mentioned the need of a boy graze, and although he had never had anything to do with oxen, he thought that by assuming a rough dress and a correspondingly rough air, he might obtain that most desirable position. When Frank had decided on taking this step he went home as fast as possible, exchanged his fine suit for the worst one he could find, made up a small bundle of a few necessary things; he wrote a note to his parents telling them what he was about to do, saying that he only wanted to see a little of the western wilds, and that he intended to be home in a short time; he begged them not to be uneasy on his account, and again declared his intention of coming back soon. Having put this note where he thought it would not be found until he had got far enough from home to prevent his being brought back, Frank secretly left the house, and hurried away to the wagon train. After hanging around for a short time he discovered that the old trapper, that had been wagon-master of the train. Seizing an opportunity when the old man was alone; Frank swaggered up to him, and asked in Old Tom looked sharply for a short time at Frank, and then relieving himself of about a pint of tobacco juice, he said, "Well, young 'un, her ye ever fit injunes, kin ye tell when the varmints is about by the way the critters carry on?" Frank's bold, swaggering air instantly deserted him, and he answered in the secretly hoped that the hostile Indians were more noble looking. At the close of a beautiful day after they had been one week on the way, Frank, who as usual was helping Nat. to drive home the oxen, saw, about a half mile off, a party of horsemen coming at a great speed towards them. Frank called to Nat., and pointed to the horsemen. Nat. looked, and instantly shouted "injuns," and beckoning Frank to follow, he started at full speed towards camp. Frank followed and being very fleet on foot he would have reached camp along with Nat., had he not in some way, got into the very midst of the herd, which so impeded his progress that Nat. get int unedd. Being alone, Frank got more and more confused, until he abandoned the idea of running for camp, and crouching he tried to hide among the oxen. How his little heart did heat as he crouched close to the side of a great bullock that of danger. His hiding place did him no good, for the Indians dashed into the mids of the herd, and he was very soon discovered. An old Indian with a hideously painted face sprung from his pony with yell, and seizing Frank by his long light hair he was about to bury his tomahawk in his young skull, when he checked himself and gazing sharply at Frank for a short time, he turned to his pony, and getting a long strap of raw-hide, he bound Frank firmly, hand and foot. A short consultation was held by the Indians, and then one of them started off in the direction of the camp, but returned soon shaking his head, and pointing to the sky, which was now studded with innumerable stars. From this Indian's actions, Frank drew the conclusion that he had been sent towards the camp to ascertain the number of men there supposed. Suddenly one of the Indians pointed to wards the camp; there seemed to be a stir as though the men were preparing to make a dash to rescue young Frank. The Indians quickly sprung to their ponies, and Frank's captor soizing him in one arm leaped nimbly upon his pony's back, and suit from Frank's friends, who were mounted at best on green mules. The little captive tried hard not to think and remained perfectly quiet; the party dashed on far from Frank's camp-home and far into the night. They had a cold, weary night's ride, and about sunrise next morning, Frank beard voices and the bark-Our young boy, whom we will now intro-duce as Frank Morton, had formed a wild, came in full view of an Indian camp, the camp of his captors. After the curiosity of all the home-Indians to assist the herdsman in taking care of captive, some dried meat was given to the oxen when they were turned out to Frank, and after he had eaten a little he clothes were taken off him and he was stained all over with walnut juice, and fitted out with moccasins and blanket like any young Indian.

Frank was then led to a lodge that stood part from the rest, and thrust in all alone. During the cold, long ride of the previous aight Frank had thought a great deal abou his own camp-fire, and of the snug little nest under a hugo pile of robes, aside of long Nat., but now his vivid imagination gave way to keen intellect which was ole in the lodge, a fine black pony standing by the lodge that was nearest to his. The idea of eluding the guard and mounting the pour flashed across his mind. Just then the guard came in with supper and went back as usual after water. The supper was brought on a flat, sharp edged stone, and Frank determined to strike the guard with this stone, and mounting the pony, flee for dear life. Grasping the stone by that part which he could most easily hold, he stationed himself near the entrance as rough a voice as he could master for the | to wait for the guard. The guard came to the entrance and begun to untie the fasten-ings. Frank disliked to do an injury to any one, but self-preservation was uppermost in his mind, and just as the guard stepped in; he sprang forward and dealt him a blow on the head with all the force he could muster. The guard fell forward without a groan. Frank rushed out, jumped on the pony and was off like the wind. He had not gone far before he was discovered, but his escape had been so sudden and unexpected, that by the time the pursuing party started he had a full half mile

This Frank incoherently promised to do, was gradually lengthening the distance between his pursuers and himself, when fissures in the earth, that are so common on the more western plains. This break was full twenty feet wide, and seemed such a formidable obstacle that poor Frank infor Indians; and, that during the interval | voluntarily checked his pony, when a vell between the grazing times of the cattle, of triumph burst from his pursuers, which urged him on. Nearing the edge of the

With a terrific half-snort, half-yell, the pony bounded forward, and landed safely on the al bellow of the oxen, mingled with the wild "hoe, ho-hoe" of the teamsters, had other side. On he dashed and when about a very stirring effect on the blood of young a quarter of a mile from the break, Frank ventured a look over his shoulder at his that afternoon, and encamped on a gentle rise about one-half mile from a small pursuers. They had reached the break, and were riding rapidly up and down to find a crossing place; but none was to be found, for the fissure extended for miles experience in his new vocation began then and there, and, although he lashed himself in either direction. Frank saw all this but he did not slacken While sitting on the bank of the little his speed, and it was not until he was miles stream watching the oxen, Frank beheld farther on his way that he allowed his on the opposite side a pretty little animal pony to walk. He kept on at a slow rate about the size of a cat, of a mingled white during the long night, and about sunrise the next morning, he had the indescribable creature to gaze upon, Frank thought, and he was about to cross the stream to form a joy of striking the Santa Fe wagon-travel, and useful we would invite those of our closer acquaintance with the animal, when on which there were fresh tracks and droppings, which showed that a team had lately slight breeze arose blowing from the animal to Frank, and ladened not with passed. A Good Year's Work. A correspondent of the Maine Furmer communicates the following, which will strike some lazy farmers with surprise; Aroestook county, sixty-three years of age, has, with the help of a boy fourteen years old, harvested, the past year, forty tuns of hay, four hundred and fifty bushels pointoes, seventy-five -bushels carrots, twenty-five bushels turnips, ten bushels encombers, four bushels beans, one hundred and tifty bushels buckwheat, eleven bushels barley, fifty bushels peanuts, two hundred and ten bushels oats. Planted one quart of corn the 14th of September; raised thirty-two bushels of sound ears, and one bushel of pop-corn. He has one bushel of sowing rye, not threshed, and one bushel of sowing peas not threshed, together with six bushels of beets, and fifteen bushels apples. He has not drank a glass of spirits for thirty-four years, and has hired but one day's work the past sea-

To OUR FARMER FRIENDS .- In order to make this column of the Spy interesting readers who follow farming, gardening or stock raising to give us the benefit of their experience. If you have made any experiments, let us know how you have succeeded. If you have followed the advice of others in adopting any special mode, whether it has proved to your advantage or otherwise, let as hear of it, that we may lay it before our readers in general. Be particular when writing to give all the data in regard to your usage or experience, viz: the time of commencing, the amount used, together with the general results. The old saying, 'figures won't lie," was never more applicable than in farming; without them an experiment is of little benefit, therefore give all the figures. In conclusion, we would say, don't be afraid to write for a newspaper; the ground well broken, it comes quite easy. Every allowance will be made for first attempts, and all communications treated with due respect.

CURE FOR FROSTED LIMBS .- We are informed on good authority, says the Country Gentleman, that nothing is better for withdrawing the frost without injury to frozen ears, cheeks and fingers, than the immediate application of kerosene-rubbing it on gently a few times. In one instance both cheeks were frozen, and this remedy produced immediate relief without the usual inflammation. The same person repeated the application at another tim with equal success. In another case the remedy was applied to a badly frozen ear, which, as in the other instances, it cured without inflammation. It is indispensable so Corn Culture.—Some Illinois farmers are disensing, in the Prairie Farmer, the question of surface culture with the "sulky plow," in contrast with the old-fashioned deep culture with the "bar plow." One says that he would not let a man cultivate his corn in his father's strong, merchant's face, were deeper than they had been before Frank deep, after the usual way, if he would work for nothing and board himself. THERE is a sort of moral obligation upon those who have land to use it, and if one has more than he can cultivate himself he should hire hands to help him, and hire men enough to thouroughly cultivate all the farming land he has. Land should not lie idle while the prices of provisions are so high. Especially must high-priced land be worked up to its maximum capacity, or there will not be an adequate return for the capital invested.

OATS FOR STOCK .- An old farmer informs us that after an experience of forty years, he finds no food so good to keep cattle in good heart, and especially for cows and sheep when coming in, as scalded oats. He says that the calves and lambs will be healthy and active, and that the loss of his lambs is of rare occurrence. It is worthy of note.-Maine Farmer. To CLEAN KNIVES.-We find that taking
