

necessary to maintain a healthful condition are leading questions in the minds of the people. Every thinking man has ! ecome a financier and legislator in imagination. There are nearly as many opinions as there are men. One would have the country "flooded with greenbacks," another prefers contraction. The Revenue Commissioner argues that money being a means to an end, and not the endthe end being trade-the increase of money will not create trade. He futher argues that the simple reasonable remedy for the evil of inflation would seem to be contraction. The resumption of specie payment is considered impossible and impracticable if possible, except through the process of contraction.

To the business man with heavy capital invested these timely opinions of the Commissioner are encouraging. With gold at 120, with a downward tendency, the condition of the market will be steadily improved and no failures result. It has been suggested to us that an increase of tariff of 33 per cent upon all imported goods, with immediate resumption of spe cie payments would solve the difficult prob lem. This would of course relieve a large class of dealers and importers, and place a futher importation beyond the destruct 'ive influences of unhealthful' competition But then there is another class of merchants who would be seriously affected by it, as home productions would come into immediate and disastrous competition Whatever is done must be done gradually so as to relieve the vast trade of this country from the danger of a crash. All com modities are gradually coming down in price, and a healthful financial condition is being established. We need futher protection." Let the rates of, tariff on all luxuries be increased 33 per cent, so as to encourage home industry, start' up the rolling mills and steel works. Render English competition impossible, and then though some goods may be higher, yet capital will be employed, and labor in healthful demand .... Everybody will be employed, his money invested profitably, and an era of general prosperity inaugurated.
