Saturday, February 26, 1870. Vankee Schoolmarm's Experience -"Disyer Boy's a Cussin'." -The The most frequent Complaint was that some one was 'cussin'" that being the chosen word of the whole negro race to describe any offense of the tongue "Dis yet boy's a cussin," we would be informed and on investigation would find the offender had been calling names, or something of the kind; not proper, to be sure, but still scarcely answering to the charge made by the insulted party as for instance, ween one day a little coony figure, half asleep raised its morsel of a band and drawled out. "Boy a cuthin; called me a foo-oo-1.!" Cussin' I cassin' in dis yer cornor; gal a Once without any premonitory signal to attract attention; a boy excluimed in wide eyed horrors. cussin 14/ "Oh! teacher; I neber cuss a bit; my mammy don't low me to cuss; boy jes'a-cussin' hese't," indignantly responded the The almost invariable answer of the children, when charged with any misdemeanor; s, eed, I meber; My, mammy don't low me' fer do it. Threatened with such an assult, the girl fook un'the complaint." took up the complaint.

"Teacher, can't yer make dis yer boy 'av-hisself,' bo enssin' me here; say he gwine to my mour." to my mout."

So Lis gwine mash yer mout, yer ole black nigger."

Hwas difficult to tell which was the blacker of the two; but it is curious how universally children and grown people use this as a term of repreach in their quarrels "you ble inigger," or "you black nigger," say nousehold words with them, and "If se gwine to mash yer mour? is the grand climax of their vengeance.

This is capital, but the following is equalizational and musing:
Changing of names is one of the most curious fancies of the colored people, old as well: ss. young. These known a whole family to change their names on the occasion of one inember being married. Some would have two or three names, which they used indiscriminately. We frequently, went to look for children whom we could not find at all by the names they had given us.

Some of them had one name for school another among their playmates and a third for home use—us a boy who entered under the name of Joseph Marshall; the boys call him Marshall Black; and the named be stowed upon him by his parents, and by which he was called at home, was Joseph Black; Thomas.

We wrote aggret many letters for the colored people; and often they would dictate at the close:
