Paddy Miles' Ride.

Mr. Miles, or "Paddy" as he was familiarly called, was foreman to the Casement Brothers, who laid the track of the Union Pacific Railroad.

The train had proceeded but a few miles down the canyon, going at a lively rate, when the engineer discovered that the train had parted, and four loaded cars had been left behind.

There were two men, Dutchmen, on the loose cars, who might put on the brakes, and stop the runaway.

"Let on the steam," cried Paddy, and with the throttle check open, with loud terrible screams of the whistle, the locomotive plunged through the gorge, the mighty rocks sending back the screams in a constant ringing echo.

"Of with the ties," shouted Paddy, once more, as the whistle shouted its warning to the station men to keep the track straight and free, for there was no time to pause—that terrible train was close to them, and if they collided, the canyon would have a fearful item added to its history.

On went the train past the side tracks, the most frantic men throwing off the ties, in hopes that some of them would remain on the track, throw off the runways, and thus save the forward train.
