Editor Spy:—As the holidays approach, our staid old city begins to exhibit an unwonted scene of bustle and cheerfulness. The store and shop windows are arrayed in their brightest attire; and the confectionary stores particularly, with their festions of evergreen, monutains of cakes, sparkling fountains and pyramids of candy, present to our juvenile population a feast of enjoyment, in comparison with which the most glowing description of the celestial paradise, such as we have heard from the reverend gentleman, who officiates at the corner of Duke and Orange streets, would be dull and insipid. Silver streets and polden pavements, and houses of precious stones, with regular Kohinoors, for door-knockers, we contess, are sufficiently seductive to the natural mind; but the starting eyes and the parted fips, and wondering wistful faces of the little folks. amply attest that Demuth's or Sheer's would be heaven enough for them.

The grown up children have their pleasures also. From two to rive o'clock every fair afternoon, North Queen and King streets, throng with Mations and Misses, disporting the miselves in their pretty, pic turesque winter costames, looking at the silks and laces in the windows, and solecting Christmas presents.

By the way everybody gives Christmas presents in Lancaster—there is a perfectmania on the subject, and it is one of the releening teatures of the place; all your triends, without exception, must be remembered by some token or other, however slight; and it requires no little skill and discerument to adapt the gifts to the particular ages, tastes and circumstances of the recipients.

Of lectures we are baving more than outer and supplementary and in particular in the content of the content of the content of the content of the recipients.

Of lectures we are baving more than ougood people are disposed to patronize; in cluding those on temperance, there have been no less than four or five inside of two weeks; this is rather surfeiting us with good things. Our experience is that two weeks; this is rather surfeiting us with good things. Our experience is that two lectures a month, with concerts and parties in between, are about as much as our purses and digestions are equal to.

Alf, Burnett's performance the first evering was the best of its kind, and most humorous we have witnessed in Lancaster for several years. The second evening it was not near so good, and was especially marred by a number of local and personal hits.

marred by a number of local and personal hits.

De Cordova was announced to lecture on "Contribite and Marriage," The notice of this theme made quite a finiter among those yet in the so called "blessed state of singleness," who expected to get some valuable hints of the former part of the subject; and were ambitious to be enlightened with respect to the latter part, without the trouble and inconvenience of a personal experiment; although the Benedicts and their sponses stayed at home, thus tacitly intimating that they bad as much information on that head as was desirable. There was quite a respectable gathering of enamored couples, whose indignation and mortification, may be imagined when Mr. De Cordova came forward and stated that owing to some mistake he had not brought that lecture along, but would give us one on "Young America" instead.

The lecturer's address was so pleasing, and his elocation so excellent, that he en listed the closest attention for almost two hours; although, really, we never before heard a subject treated in a more shallow and superficial manner.

Josh Billings amused and instructed us on Monday evening, on the subject of "Milk." His appearance is exceedingly in heard a subject treated in a more shallow and superficial manner.

Josh Billings amused and instructed us on Monday evening, on the subject of "Milk." His appearance is exceedingly eccentric, being tall, gaunt and augular, with a hump on his back, fierce mustaene, long, black hair, combed behind his cars, and banging upon his shoulders, and an awkward swinging gait, which he exaggerates as much as possible. His looks and actions, before uttering a word, provoked roars of laugh er. The lecture abounded in humor and philosophy, and, notwithstanding the acutences were already familiar with almost everything he said, having seen it in print, his droll, drawling way of saying things made them infinitely tunny—in short Josh must be seen to be rightly app eciated.

Our Representative in Congress made a narrow escape on last Saturday evening, from what might have been a very serious accident. He in company with a number of gentlemen, among whom were Judgo Hayes and our worthy Post-master, were watching the operations of the model of a patent rotary steam engine; and while standing within a few leet of it, the cast from fly wheel, which was revolving very swiftly, burst into a number of pieces—one of which struck our most estimable citizen, Mr. William Diller, breaking his leg. The remaining parts passed up through the ceiting of the building. The rest of the party escaped with a good fright. Mr. Dickey showed more composure than the other s; but then he had his military experience to sustain him. We understand the committee are ready to report, finally, on the merits of the engine, without requiring any additional experiments! and the great fear is, that science in the future may languish in this vicinity, for want of proper encour igement.

The dispute between the respective advocates of the "German" and "Reading Orrele" has terminated in a compromise on "private theatmeds." Their management and direction have been assigned to competent persons; and judging from the list of damates of the "German" and "Reading Orre tent persons; and judging from the list of diamates personae shown us, we may safely predict a rare treat in store for the favored few, who will constitute the audience. In the meantime those who have misglyings as to the morality of the stage, are deeply immersed in the study of "Belore the Footlights and Before the Scenes," in order to be resolved on this point.

There is great rivalry between our two daily papers, in the matter of local news—the Express trying hard not to be out-done by its neighbor the Intelligencer, The local reporter of the Intelligencer, a keen, witted fellow, occasionally dresses up his items, in rather spicy and pointed doggered. The Express aware of its deficiency in this particular, proceeded to supply it by installing a local reporter, a gentleman, who is a regular bona hae example of the old adage poeta nuscular non fit, and who grinds out for almost every issue, and on very unuspiring themes, the most fugularious rhymes, without pith, point, pathos or punctuation—but still it is rhyme.

A paper purporting to be a holiday sheet, edited and published by W. Hayes Grier, appeared on Thursday last, the third number I believe.

"After considerable expense and trouble," as the editor has it, he has succeed in illustrating its reading columns with tive cuts of houses, which in his wild fancy, he televes, represent the Turlleries Wilhelmhole, Palace at Berlin and Bachman's new Drying House. As I am deeply interested in the success of our local papers, and rejoice in their apparent prosperity. I feel anxious to know what the illustration means. HONORABLE competition in business very frequently succeeds in building up the re ally industrious and deserving, and showing consequently the contrary defects in the opposition. When a new competitor for business favor succeeds in planting himself, by berating and undermining the long established, by talsehood and tabrications, rest assured he is not of much account, and will not long prosper. "Truth crushed to earth will rise again;" and he who advocates the wide spread of truth may for a while be cast down, yet will eventually flourish as the "green bay tree," Insprance agents that build themselves up by tearing others down; editors and publishers who distort the truth and fabricate hes for the purpose of injuring their opponents in business, may soon find themselves buried amid their own towering lies and de-ceitful utterances.—Insurance Reporter.

Antwerp, Nov. 22nd, 1870.

Mr. Editor:—As an ex-passenger of one of those small, diry and unseaworthy line of steamboats plying between Harwich and Antwerp, I would advise no one intending to visit the continent to take passage by any of them. After having undergone the miseries of sea-sickness, on the Atlantic, it was truly provoking to find myself again a victim, noon so short a younge as eighten. ANTWERP, Nov. 22nd, 1870.

miseries of sen-sickness, on the Atlantic, it was truly provoking to find myself again a victim upon so short a voyage as eigteen hours; that too with my lellow passengers enjoying with the most unbecoming equanimity their night's rest. All my soffering I attribute to the smallness and uncleanliness of the boat "Harwich."

The Scheldt and Antwerp were indeed a reliet, and a neat apartment in the hotel De L'Europe a perfect comfort.

My sight-seeing in this ancient city began with the grand cathedral of Notre-dame. This magnificent building is five hundred feet long and two hundred and firty feet wide. Its steeple is of the most exquisite work manship, and is said to be four hundred and saxty-six feet in height. The first object which attracted my attention upon entering was Reubens' celebrated painting. "The descent from the cross." The work is a marvel. The helpless heaviness of the dead body of Carist as he is being gradually lowers by Joseph and Nicodemus, and the tenderness of the three Marys, is minitably depicted. Sir Joshua Rey olds says he considers Reuben's christ as one of the finest figures that ever was invented. On he considers Reuben's christ as one of the finest figures that ever was invented. On the other side of the cathedral are three other celebrated paintings by the same author, the elevation of the cross one of the figures in which is a portrait of Reuben's self; "The resurrection of the Saviour" and "assumption of the virgin." Autwerp seems to breathe Reuben's name in every church, public building, and costly residence. Sir Joshaa Reynolds says of him: "He was perhaps the greatest master in the "He was perhaps the greatest master in the mechanical part of the art, the best work-man with his tools that ever exercised his mechanical part of the art, the best workman with his tools that ever exercised his pencil."

From the cathedral we went to St. Paul's church. Our guide told us upon entering that he would show us Mount Calvary and Purgatory, and opened a door leading into a garden to the right of the church. Here at the end of a walk thirty five or forty yards, in extent, on either of which were statues to a!! the saints stood a mount about forty feet in height, made of camer glass and stones cemented together, surmounting which was a cross and an image representing christ crucified. This the peasantry reverence with awe and superstition. Underneath is Purgatory represented by carved liqures of wood, looking out from brightly painted flames, through bars of from. Here also they have what they say is a correct representation of the Saviour's tomb, and through a grating at the side may be seen a figure in marble representing Christ. The interior of St. Paul's, is a most as gorgeous as that of the cathedral. Beside "the seourging of Christ," there are a number of other excellent paintings by the pupils of Raubeus. After leaving the church, I wisted the private gallery of the richest banker in Antwerp, and saw some of the choicest specimeus of modern art.

The zoological gardens of Antwerp, were well worth seeing; even after the aristocratic Regent's Park of London. The aviary there is certainl, superior to that of London. The gardens are entirely supported by the citizens of Antwerp, of which they are very proud.

The streets of the city are narrow and irregular. The general architecture is very picturesque, and the costume of the pensant and market women quite it, keeping with it. The population is about one half of what it formerly way, when it was two hundred thousand. It is indeed mountait to tink of the decay of this grand old city. One visiting now, and seeing its harbor almost entirely denuded of shipping, can scarcely imagine there was a time when often two thousand and five hundred vessels lay in the scheld, awaiting their turn often two thousand and five hundred vessels lay in the scheldt, awating their turn to come to the wharves; and when five thousand merchants attended the Exchange twice a day. Antwerp owes its decay to Prilip the Second of Spain; the inquisition which he established here in its most hideous form, drove thousands of skiniul artisans to England, where they introduced the manutacraring skill of the Netherlands.

As I stood on the steps of the hotel and looked toward the catherral, the "Antwero furry" was recalled to my mind, and looked toward the catheural, the "Ant werp fury" was recalled to my mind, and imagination peopled the now so peaceful streets with mobs of uninrated men, carrying in their bands the articles of devastation, and hastening to hard from their pedestals the master pieces of so many generations. Poor Antwerp! Alexander Fainese reaped a bloody vengeance for ner maintend feonoclasm. B. FLATTERING .-- The following editorial dipping from the Insurance Reporter of Philadelphia, the ablest insurance paper in the state, will be gratifying to the friends of the Columbia Insurance Company, and to our citizens generally. Right men in right places always bring about gratifying results.

The assessment levied by the Columbia Insurance Company or Columbia, Pa., is being gradually paid, and the officers entertain sanguine in open of being able to meet the whole indebtedness, if properly seconded by the policy-holders. A number of prominent citizens of Columbia have become interested, and feel a strong desire to save the creditors and increase the business of the company. A very nice point of law might arise, should a policy holder, having refused to pay an assessment levied, subserefused to pay an assessment levied, subsequently have his property destroyed by
