

The Expedients of Slavery—Its Creed.

The Chinese are said to have labored for centuries under great embarrassment, from not knowing how to make a barrel. They could do every part but one, without any difficulty. They could make the staves, and set them up, and hoop them; they could make the heads, and put one of them in; and, indeed, with the help of a man inside, they could put the second one in; but how to get the man out after the barrel was headed up, that was a problem which they could not solve.

Had it been a southern politician inside the barrel, instead of a Chinese, he would not have experienced the slightest difficulty in crawling out at the bung-hole.

It would really be ludicrous, if it were not melancholy, to witness the shifts and expedients to which the representatives of the slave interest resort to extricate themselves from the tight places in which they frequently find themselves. Stow them in the tightest barrel; hoop it ever so well; put in both heads as tight as a drum; the bung-hole is always big enough for them to squeeze through.

They drive a hard bargain—no Jew ever drove a harder one—it goes sorely against the conscience of the North to assent to it. But once made, the free states adhere to all its terms; when, at last, a prospective advantage appearing to the South in its violation, it is suddenly discovered to have been an illegal contract, and one which never ought to have been made.

For many years the Missouri compromise was spoken of, by southern men, as something established forever; it was to be held sacred by all parties. It was hardly mentioned without being coupled with the word "sacred." If, at a former period, a northern member of Congress had seriously proposed its repeal, he would have been hoisted from all parties, and pronounced "outside the pale of any healthy political organization."

But all at once it is discovered that this compromise was a violation of the constitution, though what provision of the constitution it violates no one has yet been astute enough to point out. Men have risen up at this day, wiser than those who framed the constitution, and understanding its provisions better than those who made them, and better than their great contemporary judges, who had some reputation for wisdom in their day.

There is one lesson which the free states have been slow to learn, but which they would be blind not to perceive now. It is this: that slavery knows no law; that it has no respect for any constitution; and regards no compact; its whole creed is spelt by five letters—that creed is power.

This is necessarily so, from the nature of things. Injustice and wrong are the very essence of slavery. They constitute its life blood. They are its foundation stones. Habitual disregard of the rights of one class of human beings necessarily begets disregard to the rights of all others.

Power must be met by power. Encroachment must be checked by resistance. We call upon the people of the free states to arouse to a sense of the dangers that threaten them. The progress of slavery will find no limit until the authoritative voice of the free states, spoken through more faithful representatives in Congress, shall fix a limit, not to be overstepped—not to be removed.—N. Y. Evening Post.

In the Smoke.

A little boy was looking into the peep-holes of a showman's show, at a print of the battle of Bunker's Hill. It was stated upon the descriptive legend annexed, among other things, that a view could be obtained of the gallant Hessians, charging up the hill. The little boy looked after them in vain, and finally inquired of the exhibitor for their precise locality. Said the showman, "Don't you see the smoke?" "Yes," said the boy. "Well," replied the other, "the gallant Hessians are in the smoke. If you'll come again to-morrow, perhaps the smoke will be cleared away, and then you can see the gallant Hessians charging up the hill."

The main body of gallant freemen in Congress are in the smoke. We can't see 'em; except a few. They were in the smoke during the debate on the Missouri compromise; they were again in the smoke during the debate upon the compromise of 1850; and both times the innocents at the North were assured that when the smoke had cleared away, they could see their gallant freemen, the Northern representatives. But the smoke didn't clear away. It hangs yet heavily over the capital. Let us hope that it will now clear away, and that we can see our gallant freemen, "charging up the hill."—Hartford Republican.

Seizure of the Black Warrior.

The Charleston Mercury of March 6th gives the following account, which is more detailed than that received by telegraph, of the seizure at Havana of the steamer Black Warrior:

"It has been the custom at Havana for some eighteen months past, to allow steamships which merely touched at that place without freight to land, to hand in to the boarding officer of the customs a nominal manifest, and under this regulation, which had received the sanction of the authorities there, Capt. Bullock, of the Black Warrior, reported his ship in ballast when boarded by the revenue officer. The official of the custom returned to the Black Warrior several times during the day, on each occasion being informed that the ship was in ballast; but, at the third interview, Capt. Bullock suspecting that something more than usual was intended by these repeated visits, informed the officer that he had on board nine hundred bales of cotton for New York, but nothing for Havana. Captain Bullock was then informed that his ship would be seized for an infraction of the revenue laws. Capt. Bullock immediately took the necessary steps to alter his manifest, the time allowed by law (twelve hours) for any alterations in the manifest not having expired, but the authorities positively declined allowing him to do so, and proceeded to take possession of the ship, which Capt. Bullock refused to give up, until so large a force was sent down to the ship as to render resistance useless.

Some forty passengers were on board the Black Warrior, who were not allowed to quit the ship, their baggage being locked up by the authorities.

Under our money head to-day are the particulars of a negotiation just effected by Governor Johnston, now President of the Allegheny Valley Railroad, for the purchase of 10,000 tons of iron. The contract is for Pennsylvania iron, and the securities for it were all disposed of here. It will enable the Company to proceed vigorously with the work, by completing the track from Pittsburg to Brookville.—Philadelphia Register.
