The Report sets out by informing us that "within the limits of the United States religious destitution lies comparatively at the South and Southwest;" and that "from the first settlement of the country the North has preserved a decided religious superiority over the South, especially in three important particulars-in an ample supply of Chri tian institutions, exten ive supply of Christian truth, and thorough Christian regimen, both in the Church and in the community." It is likewise asserted in this Report, that, "while the Southwestern States b ve always needed a stronger aim of the Chri tian mini try to raise them up toward a Christian equality with their Nort craffrethren, their supply in this res et has always been de-cidedly inferior". The italies are not ours, and the emphasis of this prime authority on the wretched condition modest in the way of asserting their spiritual advantages. Why this inferiority should exist at the South it would be expecting too much of the Rev. Dr. Stiles to state; but we may help him out of the scrape by saying that the worst possible ba is for Christianity is the stealing of men and women, both enslaving the original articles and all their descendants, and making licentious intercourse by the whites with the blacks almost as common in the South as marriage.
