

The Charity of Kind Words, of Judgment and Commendation.

"I gave the poor devil a dollar, and bade him go about his business."

But how did you give it? Grudgingly, or as if it was a pleasant duty? Was there any heart in it? Or was the coin flung at him with an emphasis that said plainer than words—"You may be needy, or you may not; here's a dollar to get rid of you—cheap at that!" If the latter be true, good sir, you only wounded the sensitive heart of poverty and misfortune more deeply. Bread bought with that dollar would prove like the heart of the fabled Dead Sea apple upon the tongue of the eater. There is little comfort in eating a morsel given grudgingly, even with the sharpened appetite of famine.

Eloquence consists essentially in the manner; appropriateness of gesture, the intonation and even in the expression of the speaker's eye. The most beautiful imagery and the most exalted sentiments may be tortured into commonplace, by a bungling speaker. And so it is in giving. There is a certain something conveyed in the manner, that precedes the gift and suffices it, or impairs its beauty with the recipient, may be; nay, it is so. A tender heart never distills its bounty coldly, neither does an unfeeling heart dispense bounty feelingly. The one acts instinctively, the other mechanically.

The charity of kind words is lovely beyond description. It rivals the good-will of angels, and many a broken spirit has been healed and restored to the path of virtue and usefulness which had almost been abandoned in the dark hour of misfortune. A kind word is so easily spoken and being the offspring of kindly impulse, it is not strange that the world should be so chary of them? More precious than fine gold—the wealth of Peru, or the gems of Golconda, and more grateful to the sinking senses than the balmy winds of Araby, yet costing the giver nothing—why should men and women withhold the boon from the famishing souls around them?

My friend me is a common inheritance, and none can claim immunity from its scourge, its rack, or its wheel. Your neighbor may be struck down to-day, but he is not an inviolable hand may smite you to-morrow. Yesterday he sat down in the lap of Peace and Contentment, and the sun of Prosperity fell full upon his hearthstone. To-day his bark is a wreck on a shore wrapped in almost impenetrable fog. To-morrow you may be like him—no hearth is secure from the terrible visitation, no hopes and no heart-flowers are secure from blight.

How many homeless orphans have been left for a season upon the narrow board that separates a life of virtue and usefulness from one of vice and crime, yearning to go back, yet perceiving no sign of friendly welcome, and at last go downward into the yawning gulf and are lost to the world forever! And this, when one kind word and a glance of sympathy might have saved! But the world is so absorbed in plans of self-getting that it has little heart for such charity. And so the friendless and unfortunate too often receive instead of the bread of sympathy, the stone of indifference, and reject the flattering proffer only to accept the wages of disgrace and shame, O, merciful, thoughtful world! Let us pass to the charity of judgment and commendation.

There is no lack of means for the punishment of crime in the civilized world, and no dearth of plans for the reformation of criminals. Prisons and workhouses, galleys, gallies and scourges—there is a sufficiency of all the e, but how few plans for the prevention of crime except in so much, as the different modes of wreaking legal vengeance upon offenders may act as a preventive by the terrors they inspire. The philosophy of our legislators seems remarkably deficient in respect to the most natural method of lessening vice and crime. By far the greater portion of our criminal code is as useless as an iceberg. The punishment of crime seems to be the great object, while prevention is secondary and incidental. Whereas, the prevention of crime should be the great object, and punishment only as a last resort when the means for prevention fail.

Perhaps civil law can never be an efficient helper in the prevention of crime, that is, considered as a direct agent. It may, and should guard the avenues through which men find the way to a course of criminal conduct—it may remove the incentives to pursue such a course, in a degree. But there are inducements to do wrong which the law, however cunning, cannot remove. Custom must effect their removal if they be removed. When men and women learn their duty, and do it, half of the criminal laws that now lumber the statute books of Christendom, will become useless; for one great cause of crime and immorality, lies in the world's habitual uncharitableness in judgment and commendation.

Look at it. If a young man from false education or from weakness in the bewilderment of a moment of temptation, chances to make a misstep, what is the world's action? Oh, down with the shameless villain!—Kick him out of society—out of decent society, beyond the influence of good example! But what is his crime? It may have been bad luck, or bad management in business, so that bankruptcy was inevitable. Or, it may be that Rum in an unguarded moment, wrested the reins of judgment from the hands of Reason. Or, he may have fallen for one short hour, tempted by the devil of the gaming table. No matter, says the world, down with him! He will pollute the hearts of our children, and seduce them from the path of virtue!

This is all wrong—cruelly wrong. One misdeed cannot mar the beauty of a good character beyond forgiveness and restoration. Thousands of young men have been driven by such uncharitable condemnation to strike out in the most daring recklessness of conduct. The drunkard's grave has swallowed up its thousands and tens of thousands, because of the world's harsh judgment. How deep is the wrong! A mild reproof, a kind word fitly spoken, a friendly hand extended to the erring man in the dark hour of awakening reason, when the fear of repentance steals down his cheek—these things would rescue thousands from crime and ruin, and render them benefactors of their fellow men, rather than haters and contempters.

When the world shall substitute kind words and gentle reproof for its harsh judgments, it will have made a long stride toward the prevention of crime and immorality. But now, we to the woman who is dragged before its tribunal, the victim of villainy and deceit. Judged by the peers of her destroyer, or the associates of her days of innocence, she may not hope for mercy. Betrayed, she is not unfortunate, but a criminal, and cannot escape the wrath of the pitiless world. She must go down the broad road to disgrace and ruin, an outcast among outcasts, condemned to wallow in the filth of Vice until every virtuous inclination is rooted out. Her crime, a heart too guileless to suspect the baseness of others.

HARD TIMES IN BOSTON.—The Boston liquor sellers are beginning to think of a surrender. The late election is so decidedly against them that they want to sell out. A correspondent of the Herald says: "The liquor sellers are firing badly, and their condition is likely to be much worse before it can be made any better, as the new Legislature will contain an overwhelming majority of the most uncompromising legal sanitarians in the world, who will convert the law into a regular impatience rack, and if that be not enough, will authorize an ad hoc de of all the liquor in the State, with the makers and sellers of the same to be thrown in."

LAST KANSAS EMIGRATION PARTY.—The fifth and last party of emigrants from this city to Kansas, left yesterday afternoon, under the charge of Mr. Charles H. Brantcomb, of Hol-yoke, agent of the Emigrant Aid Company. They left in good spirits. The party numbered thirty when it reached Springfield, where three more joined it. A much larger company would have gone had not the Aid Company discouraged further emigration at this late period of the season. No other party will be sent out until spring.
