Ah, there we have it at last. (Hardon the long quotation.) But where is the mother whose maternal heart does not throb with profoundest sympathy, at the wrongs of the poor, oppressed, down-trodden, people of our land? But can she give nothing but her sympathy? Must she fixed some of the straw which beforever condemned to hear a voice calling "Where is thy brother?", yet be impotent to say, "I wash my hands of this foul iniquity, this traffic in the souls of men?" 'Must our brother's blood forever cry to us from the ground, and we be able to do nothing for the cause of human freedom?

Thow often have I knelt at the family altar of a good old man, whose soul is now in Heaven, while he on bended knees, poured out his soul in invocation; and often as the petition ascended to the throne of the Eternal, "Father, grant that we may be an unbroken re who in addition to experifamily in Thy Kingdom," did this pehate had the best advantages of tition accompany it, "And grant, O, action; and although I have found Heavenly Father, that the time may speedily come, when the accursed sin alluad no previous acquaintance, of slavery shall be done away," and how heartily did my heart respond, the flown from the Institute Amen, to this petition of the saitedn

It was permitted me once to feel a moiety of the agony that deluges the slave mother's soul, when she embraces her darling for the last time, and knows that for her henceforth, there is no more joy or hope. Must the people of the North be compelled forever to be accessary to this horrible traffic in the souls of men? (for we are that, however you may seek to disguise the fact.)

National sins are punished with National judgments. Thus it was in Christ's time, and thus it will be now. Surely as there is a God of justice, who ruleth the destiny of nations, will he inflict upon this nation a punishment commensurate with its crimes, if the people do not repent, and set themselves to work to eradicate this great evil, this plague spot upon the morals and happiness of the Americanpeople.
