NEITHER POVECTY NOR BICHES.

I love to dwell betwirt the hills and dales, Neither to be so great as to be envied, Nor yet so poor the world should pity me.

In a choice old book we find these choice old words-and in a choicer and other book one said, give me neither poverty nor riches. Riches are cumbersome, they fetter the soul's energy, change the nature of man, so that he who in poverty shared half with his brother, to-day, when he hath Scaled the height of his ambition, and Hath a plenty of this world's goods, gjudges a smile, even a pleasant look, o his poor old neighbor. But poverty, Oh, it is a terrible ban, a harsh, contemptuous master—a frowning, ogreish master. It tempts faith to doubt, and hope to despair.

To be chained to the plow, the anwil, the bench, the desk, the penhow galling! To pinch one garment to said to another, and to see both fall like ashes from burnt wood, from the roiling figures, to bear with an aching heart the cruel treatment of the landord who measures the inclination by the inability, to see the sorrow of a brother poor man, when told he must Wait a little longer—these, to a sensilive mind are worse than death. Well may such an one exclaim with the great apostle, I die daily.

But neither poverty nor richesneither the high mountain nor deep Failley-neither the over full coffer hor the empty purse-neither the over stocked farm nor the barren patch of ground—neither the princely mansion nor the tottering tenementneither the false fawning of the crowd nor the pitying sympathy of the lowly, twould we covet. A little house so that tasto and elegance presides, a Yew friends-a moderate sum for the iss of henevolence, a retreat far way from craven hollow-hearted fashfounds, a few trees, a few flowers, and fingly books, these to posess, who could for be as happy as this world allots?

Alas! change would come even then. Triple je purify, sorrows to ennoble. Other flowers than those in the garden Lie, the strong oak of manhood, his tender sapling of childhood. Books with the aching head were wearisome, Hither, Ye Hungry.

S. JONES takes this method to inform the broad heaven.

S. JONES takes this method to inform the broad heaven.

Nothing keeps young but the heart, and that filled with flowers of sweet affection may shed sweetness and beauty on any lot. Earth is only a copping place, a transient depot for passeingers traveling heavenward, and what matter if we enter the car of steriffy from a gothic arched palace or a wayside hoarded shelter, so long is we have the pass that will carry us safely to the city of pearly gates and breets of gold!—Olive Branch.

With this new method Dr. C. has restored many afflicted ones to perfect health; as an evidence of which he has intumerable certificates. Speaking of the treatment a physician says; It is evident that inhaling—constantly breathing an agreeable, healing vapor, the medicinal properties must come in direct contact with the whole of the arial cavity of the lungs, and trus escape the many and varied changes produced upon them when introduced into the stomach, and the stomach of the stomach o subjected to the process of digestion.
