world over. The unholy conduct of these men, put to the "compendium of the United States census" for 1850, affords too much light for "Niggers" and such as own them not. Dod tneys, Atchison & Co., not know that, by sowing to the wind they are likely to reap the whirlwind?" Perhaps not one in thirty in Missouri, owns a negro or the figure of a slave. Is not this ominous? And men know that where slavery abound-(nigger I mean,) it represses white labor. It keeps down the value of land; it discourages enterprise and energy; is a hindrance to Common Schools; is a drawback to internal improvements. Yet, Iowa Dem—ever did, and he did and do all his progenitors, both on the paternal and maternal sides. More negroes are valuable as those are belonging to any gentleman in Missouri, or anywhere else, and I will defend my rights with as much vigor and pertinacity as God and my powers will endow me to do. But rather than witness such barbarous assaults and subsidy against upon the Constitution, upon the Bill of Right, upon order, decency, moral, virtue and religion, and law and justice, for the sake and object of making, by force Kansas a Slave State, or not, for ever would I see my negroes and those of all my kindred, and all in Missouri, and all in the United States, sowed up in one huge sack, a thousand mill stones fastened to it, and the whole cast into the depths of the Pacific. I am a Virginian; and on my way up the river from St. Louis, on the boats and at the landings, the portrait, I think saw and heard what I shall but faintly describe.

And now a few words concerning Kansas. It contains some very rich lands and some very good timber. These lie in strips, with wide intervening belts of only tolerable, and very good for nothing hills, precipices and holes. The reservations are by far the best. It has been said that the Kansas Legislature, so called, was a legal constituted body; that Judges Doe and Richard are, and so was the Border said so; that the Border Democrats, including Uncle Davy, said so; that Mr. Pierce, our Great Father, said so, or at least nodded assent. Well, how stand the facts? Missouri Democrats, some of them pretty well off, as the phrase is, and planters of others neither owning nor claiming a foot of land on the globe, not a house, cow, sheep or grain were fitted to go and do the voting, the cursing, the drinking, and other overt Democratic acts. Twenty five of these Patriots, headed and encouraged by a Gladstoving and Cursing Dodge, came all the way from Missouri county, Delaware, to vote. Whoever has the right to vote has the right to be elected—but you know the balance. This sage body of Legislators moved the seat of Government—to the Indian country—not Kansas for Boston, Johnson's, in the Indian country; and there they passed ten Democratic laws, and sent them to Kansas. Did not a certain Greek lawgiver (a Spartan perhaps) exhibit a cold water tacy and after or repent until his intimate friend actually turned him off to death? Well, just so did Jackson, Van Buren, Polk, Atchison and Shrugethose, Democrats of the Legislature. They are all dead. When Buchanan first entered the Territory, he wished to do very pleasant and entertaining thing on his arrival, the fact of arrival. But now, who expects to hear him say, well and good have I done? But he would not be understood to call the reserves but Mr. Montgomery knows whether it is so or not.

But, to return; if all earth, sea and skies assert that the Kansas Legislature was a legally constituted body, will it not be a bare-faced lie? Can any man say it? Again, I wait moving rapidly to improvement, leaving Missouri out of sight; and soon, very soon few or no gentlemen will come to Kansas or Nebraska via St. Louis or the river. Your city and the river towns have had and will lose millions, all from Atchison's conduct. Henceforth and forever the travel will be through southern Iowa.

I have been in Kansas and can say of a truth that there are few, very few abolitionists there, but a huge majority of them are for making Kansas a free State, and very many of them are not from the North or East either. They are from Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri! Don't this show that Atchison settled his tavern till when his host was from home! The frequent assaults made upon the persons, property and sacred rights of citizens, fill even honest republicans and slaveholders with disgust and abhorrence. The settlers in Kansas were every where styled ignorant asses, serfs, paupers, vagabonds, cowards, dastards and "nigger stealers." I was ready to shoot them down as I would wolves at first sight. I got my revolvers ready. But I thought I would first go into Kansas and see the scamps myself. And what did they appear to be when seen and conversed with? A more industrious, neat, cleanly, sober, peaceable, orderly, well educated and well bred people are not to be found on the face of the Earth, than very many of them are. I found them to be good historians, mathematicians, grammarians, and even linguists. Some had read with profit Herodotus, Xenophon, Livy, Ovid, Homer, and Virgil, &c., &c., and were by no means ignorant of the laws of nature and nations; international law, the common law, martial law, the laws of Congress and of many of the States—and the laws of High Heaven. Without drawing any comparison invidiously, there are scores of them who could make a fool of Atchison in Astronomy, Geometry, Law, Philosophy, or any thing; or any art or science you could name. I could not find it in my heart to shoot one of them, merely because they could not agree with me that it was better for our happiness and prosperity not to own slaves and not to be dependent on free labor. So I left them, determined to keep my slaves and let them make Kansas a Slave State, or a Free one, as they, the only rightful judges, deem best for themselves and their posterity.

Died,

In Coudersport, on Saturday, the 8th inst., MILTON A. PARSON, aged about 22.

In Ulysses, Potter Co., Feb 6, 1856, WALKER SMITH, aged 53 years and 10 days. The disease which has filled during the last several weeks of his pilgrimage, and which terminated his earthly existence, was Dropsy of the Chest. While wasting away under its palsied and deadly progress, his faith grew stronger in the glorious change at hand, and were by no means ignorant of the laws of nature and nations; international law, the common law, martial law, the laws of Congress and of many of the States—and the laws of High Heaven. Without drawing any comparison invidiously, there are scores of them who could make a fool of Atchison in Astronomy, Geometry, Law, Philosophy, or any thing; or any art or science you could name. I could not find it in my heart to shoot one of them, merely because they could not agree with me that it was better for our happiness and prosperity not to own slaves and not to be dependent on free labor.
