The School of Natural History.

We publish in another place a full account of Mr. Anderson's gift of an island, the buildings thereon, and a sum of money for the establishment of a school of Natural History under the management of Prof. Louis Agassiz. The establishment of a school of this character has long been one of the dreams of the great naturalist, and it is with no small satisfaction that we record the fact that this fancy is to be made a fact through the generosity of one of our own citizens.

We are informed that Professor Agassiz himself was overjoyed at the attainment of his wishes, a feeling shared in the liveliest degree by the

THE SPIRITS OF NIGHT.

THE SPIRITS OF NIGHT. Forth on the clear and lovely night I gazed With rapture : for each lovely herb, or moss, Or humble flowret, on the warm earth lay Tranquil and pieased, for the oppressive heat Of day had passed, and from the farthest depths Of the blue ether, peeping gaily forth Between the erested summit of the hills, Star after star arose, all newly decked With gittering splendor, till the vanit of Heaven Glow d with fresh beauty. As I looked there came A form that seemed of thinnest ether made, With gittering splendor, till the vanit of Heaven Glow d with fresh beauty. As I looked there came A form that seemed of thinnest ether made, With gute yet brilliant radiance, and she danced O er wood and field, and from her starry wing shook the dew-spangles o'er the grateful earth, Till on each blade of grass, or quiv ring leaf, Or sweet wild flower that decks the mountain Spling.

Or sweet wild flower that decks the mountain spring. Or the tall pine, the graceful forest's pride, The pearly globes in glist ning beauty lay Reflecting back each star that peerless shone From yon bright field of azure glorious. Then fifting on to each lone wandering rill, Or ha'f exhausted spring that listlessly Meandered down its worted course, she waved Her glit'ring phion, and the limpid stream Joyfully danced along its pebbly track Fibed with new life t endure the morrow's heat ; And as its bright glad waters newly bathed The grassy margin joyously they sung. Another came : of a light roseate hne With a faint tinge of gold that o'er her form Faded, and glowed, and faded, as along, Playful and light, she flew, and every beam Of starlig t paled before her purer ray. Onward she passed—and to each fainting flower Restored the wonted odor which had fled When the rude sunbeams scorched their inmost cells

And yet another came and lovelier still, If lovelier could have been, of purest white Was she but as transparent as the air.
