Coudersport Market. Table listing prices for various goods like No. 1 white, red winter, No. 1 spring, etc.

At Home. Hon. J. S. Mann is at home this week attending Court. He is looking well and appears to be in his usual health and spirits.

Work the Roads. A great deal has been said and written late years about working the roads in the early part of the season so as to give them a chance to get hard and beaten before the fall rains. A decided improvement has taken place in this respect over the old practice, but we mention the subject at this time to remind interested of its importance.

Called. Mr. Huston, of the Athens Gleaser, called on us Wednesday. During the fall and winter he was confined to the house by sickness and as he was the manager of the establishment the paper was discontinued for the time being. He is now traveling to recuperate his health and hopes soon to be able to return to his old business. We certainly wish him God speed.

Something New. Coudersport has another novelty—We can begin to put on something of the airs of more pretentious persons. A. H. Peirce has attached to the rear of his shop on Second street, a bowling alley. The game is a fine exercise, and industriously followed we judge it would result in a good deal of muscular development.

The Old Story. We see by some our exchanges that in various counties of the State the people are afflicted with more than an ordinary number of office-hunters for the local offices. We congratulate ourselves that thus far during the present season our people have been exempt from the most of that annoying annoyance. We can endure to be buttonholed by the vendor of night-rings; we can patiently submit to the infliction of the book-agent's hammer; we can survive a drunken man's over-but the office-seeker's talk is much for our nervous system. We answer yes in a meaningless and inappropriate way, while we inwardly say that any other man in the wide world than this one may get the place.

Music Lessons. We understand that Miss E. Gertrude Hamilton will be home in a few days, to remain during her vacation of ten weeks. During that time she would like to take music pupils in music lessons. She will play the piano, and also the first lessons on the violin.

Notice. The Baptist society had an ice cream social at the Court House Tuesday evening, the first of the season. Receipts, twenty-five dollars.

Notice. For the Journal. "Cherie," says Robin, high up in a tree. "This is a pretty square, at least for a tree, and," "Ye-es," replies his wife, "but why are these wagons here?" "Do these people here think they are pretty?" "Suppose they do?" says Robin, tipping his head sideways, "and people in some places have statues and fountains." "Well," answers Cherie, thoughtfully, "I don't care what wagons nor statues, but I like a fountain; and, most of all, clean, nice streets with little children playing on them."

For the Journal. On opening my potato bins this spring I found in them some numbers of a, to me, strange bug. Since then they have appeared in great numbers and may be found upon various kinds of herbage, in the plowed field, in the dust of the road, but chiefly upon nasturtiums and potatoes. They are of a whitish form about one-half inch in length, with cases yellow striped with black, head and underpart of a dingy yellow marked with black blotches.

They have commenced laying their eggs on the young potato leaves. They can readily be detected by examination—a red bunch of elongated eggs attached by the end, in number from six or eight to twenty.

On examination I am satisfied they are not the true "Colorado potato bug," (Doryphora 10-lineata), but the Doryphora juncta, a bug so nearly resembling the D. 10-lineata as not to be distinguished but upon close comparison. This bug has but eight stripes on its wing cases, and the second and third stripes join behind as in the case of the D. 10-juncta. They also have the black spot on each thigh. The grubs have not yet appeared, so I cannot report at present upon their habits or destructiveness. Yours, etc., E. O. ASTIN.

Rain. Monday and Tuesday people from all sections of the County who were here attending court, told one common story that unless we had rain very soon the grass crop would be a failure and other things would suffer badly. Tuesday afternoon it commenced raining and continued well into the night. People seemed satisfied for once to let it rain, no matter who got wet.

Fishing Continues. Our own citizens and parties from abroad are continually whipping the streams with fly or bait and generally with fair success. But we heard one gentleman, a stranger, declare that he was quite disgusted with the thing. He had been out six or eight hours in company with half a dozen others and altogether they only got about twenty small fish.

Court. His Honor Judge Williams is holding the present term of Court. Business is being rapidly disposed of. We will give a report of proceedings next week.

Weed Your Own Gardens. Weed your own gardens—let others alone. We'll have plenty of weeding to attend to at home; For if weeds, tares and thistles by others are grown You will find in your gardens enough of your own.

'Twould be better I think for our gardens all round If not a tare, weed or thistle could in them be found. But as all are cursed with them in gardens the best, Weed your own garden first before weeding the rest.

When the job is quite finished not a weed to be found. Every thing we call evil pulled out of the ground. You will find yourself wearied and willing to rest. From trying to make your own garden the best.

Our weeding all finished 'tis a job that's well done! How nicely things grow in warm showers and sun. We can go to our neighbors where weeds e'er abound And pull them up for them where e'er they are found. But behold! our own garden, my soul! what a sight. Weeds growing again in such terrible plight. Growing thicker and faster than ever before. Keep pulling and pulling over and o'er.

These lines have a moral which if well understood And lived to by all, would result in much good. If you don't understand it nor see your own weeds Then keep fretting and tattling of others bad deeds. L. D. E.
