It comes with the suddenness of a flash. You are unprepared. Your better nature is asleep, and you yield and are lost. Think how frightful are the results of some of these visitations. Look at the French revolution, that era of national chaos which has not vet given place to order. Take our own late war, which was foretold years ago by De Tocqueville. We winked at the corruptions that were sapping the foundations of our liberties. Great and good men lifted up their voices and cried to us; "Be prepared!" but we slumbered and slept, and then came the dreadful hour of slaughter. We had no oil in our lamps, and this great, foolish nation was taken and shaken and made to look God in the face. Then we were forced to learn that cotton was not king, that money was not king, that policy was not king, but that truth, justice and God there was rushing to the marketplace to buy the wisdom that we had
