DEATH OF WPLLINGTON.

The decease of Arthur Wellesley, the conqueror at Waterloo, fill be commemmented in Great fraction by the sublimest ceremonies. Helder it a ripe old age, full of honors. But his heroism did not make him a statesman. With all his popularity among the English people, he could not head a ministry, or rescue the government from a political or financial government from a political or financial crisis. He was a sort of adviser of the Crown; but he acted more in the capacity of a court favorite than as a wise country of a court favorite than a court favorite t cellor, whose suggestions were received as the law. Besides, he knew his place. Fine and Coarse Boots and Shoes, and could not fill with honor to himself. He will be on hands, and mass factured in a style superior to any horse of or manufactured in a style superior to any horse of or manufactured in a style superior to any horse of or manufactured in a style superior to any horse of or fall to give entire satisfaction. He did not aspire to positions which he run the risk of tarnishing it by any failure run the risk of tarnishing it by any induce in the difficult field of statesmanship. Had be acted otherwise—had he entered in be acted otherwise—had he entered in competition with the Peels, the Palmerstons, the Derbys, and the Stanleys-he stons, the Derbys, and the Stanleys—ne would have lost his stronghold upon the people's affections, and would have gone to his grave with none of the expressions of the strong like incomes to the strong like in gratitude which now rise like incense to Glen Hope, Oct. 7, 1839.—6m. his memory.—Wash.
