

ON CATTLE FEEDING.
As this is the season when feeding cattle for winter beef is a prime object with all farmers, and also when he should prepare to lay out a system for winter feeding, we presume that a few remarks on this subject will be as words in right season.
In a great many cases cattle feeding is badly managed on account of irregularity. Although this is so common, and the consequences so palpable, yet it is a point very apt to be overlooked. If we were to ask six people how they use a certain kind of food for their stock, we should probably get as many different answers. Some may use hay and turnips, giving plenty of the former, and sometimes of the latter, just as they find it convenient to provide them. The hay is given in large quantities at one time, with the injunction to let them have more, till they have finished what they have got. But the best method in this is on the principle of little and often. One day they get turnips in such large quantities as to produce the symptoms, and no doubt some of the effects of scouring, and at another time they have so few that they are bound up in the bowels. And after trying this up-and-down way of it for a time, it is found out that the beasts hardly pay the expense of carrying the roots for them, and the whole plan is condemned as unprofitable. Perhaps some artificial food is used, but instead of giving it regularly as to time and quantity, they get it just as suits the parties in charge; and as the beasts eat it readily, and are anxious to get it, having no stated time for that, they are always on the look-out whenever they see the feeder, and are deprived of that rest which they ought to enjoy.
A good plan for feeding is to give the rattle hay when they are cleaning out in the morning, then give each about a bushel of turnips, and litter them deep, and at breakfast give each about another bushel of turnips, or half turnips and potatoes cut up, and leave them till noon; this is for stall feeding. The cattle want to lie soft, and enjoy rest, in order to grow fat. About one o'clock, they should get another feed of turnips, and a few potatoes, about a quarter of a bushel of each, and at 2 o'clock a feed of good hay. At 5 o'clock, P. M. they should get some hay, and be cleaned out again, after which they should be well littered for the night, get some fresh hay in their racks, and a composition food of boiled pumpkins, potatoes, and Indian meal, slightly salted; after which, let them rest for the night. Turnips should never be given in a frozen state, yet some farmers never think about this; the hay should be kept in moderately warm, dry, and well ventilated stables.
For winter-feeding, cattle should get their food, as regular as the feeders. Dry hay is a sorry morsel, dry in and dry out, and especially heated hay, that miserable stuff, deprived of half its original nutritive qualities by heating in the mow. This kind of hay is plenty. Potatoes and turnips, or cabbages and boiled Indian meal should be given to all cattle, young and old, at least once per day during the winter season. Every farmer should have a large iron boiler in a well-built shed, and food should be boiled in it once every day for milk cows; chopped straw, hay, crushed oats, a few potatoes, turnips, cabbages, &c., make palatable and comforting meals for neat cattle, but food must be cooked at stated times, or the good effects of cooked meals will not be exhibited.

TRICKS OF ANIMALS.
In breaking or managing a horse, however intractable his temper may be, preserve your own. Almost every fault he has, arises from ignorance. Be patient with him; teach and coax him, and success in time is certain. There are tricks, however, which are the result of confirmed habit or viciousness, and these, sometimes, require a different treatment. A horse accustomed to starting and running away, may be effectually cured by putting him to the top of his speed on such occasions, and running till pretty thoroughly exhausted and tired.
A horse that had a trick of pulling his bridle and breaking it, was at last reduced to better habits by tying him tightly to a stake driven on the bank of a deep stream, with his tail pointing to the water; he commenced pulling at the halter, which suddenly parted; over the bank he tumbled, and, after a somersault or two, and floundering awhile in the water, he was satisfied to remain at his post in future, and break no more bridles.
A ram has been cured of butting at everything and everybody, by placing an upsetting effigy in a similar position; the sudden assault on a wintry day then resulted in tumbling his ramship into a cold bath, which his improved manner took good care to avoid in future.
A sheep-killing dog has been made too much ashamed ever again to look a sheep in the face, by tying his leg to a stout ram on the brow of a hill, while the flock were quietly feeding at the bottom. The ram being free and in haste to rejoin his friends, tumbled and thumped Master Tray so sadly over the stones and gullies, that he was quite satisfied to confine himself to cooked mutton thereafter.
Man's reason was given him to control the beasts of the field and birds of the air, by other means than by force. If he will bring this into play, he will have no difficulty in meeting and overcoming every emergency of perverse instinct or bad habit in the dumb things, by his superior cunning.
A rustic belle, who came tripping in the house one evening from the fields, was told by her city cousin that she looked as fresh as a daisy kissed with dew. Well, it wasn't any fellow of that name, but Bill Jones, that kissed me, and confound his picture, I told him every body would know it.
