

MODES OF RECOVERING THEM.
Soils, like all other soils, differ in quality, and hence it is difficult to find a common remedy to them all. Answer to W. W. E., however, whose soil from the labor of his letter is evidently bloated, we would recommend the following:
1. The immediate neighborhood must doubtless contain much swamp muck, as his soil seems to be denuded of much vegetable matter, and has probably yielded up its organic constituents to floods passing over its surface. This muck should be returned to his sandy soil to supply it with organic matter. In its return, the muck should be decomposed by such of the means we have given in our former volumes, as would bring into requisition the various inorganic constituents of his soil. Thus, if by analysis it is found to be deficient in chlorides and soda, or either of them, decompose the muck before use in the soil with the salt and lime mixture, and he will thus supply the necessary deficiencies, while the organic matter thus added will correct the mechanical condition of his soil. If clay pits are near, his composts should be made in part with clay; this will have a beneficial tendency in increasing the adhesive powers of the soil, besides permitting the clay to retain the ammonia consequent upon the fermentation of his compost heaps. Clay once charged with ammonia, and properly subdivided in a sandy soil, loses some of its mechanical peculiarities, and ceases to be a mortar with the soil. In localities where muck cannot be procured, or organic substances are not readily obtained, charcoal dust may be used for the purpose of rendering the soil retentive of ammonia; but this alone will not correct the overplurulent property of the sand. It will, however, accelerate the growth of clover, buckwheat, and other green crops, the plowing of which will increase the organic matter of the soil, and add to its tenacity. All these remedies, however, are useless, unless the inorganic deficiencies of the soil are supplied. With these, even in small quantities, green crops may so readily be raised in sandy soils as to add materially to their density. Turnips turn broadest and plowed under in full leaf, is a good practice after the previous plowing in of clover crops. Some sandy soils are rendered more tenacious by the use of lime, particularly when accompanied by the addition of organic matter;—others are injured by the application of lime. When the ultimate particles of sand are spherical, and they are often found to be so, when previously acted upon by water, slight rains lubricate these polished surfaces, and cause the sand to pack. The addition of lime to such sands applied in the cultivated form, roughens these surfaces, forming spongy particles of lime, and prevents the mechanical conditions before referred to. Some sands are materially benefited by the application of plaster, both from the addition of its chemical constituents, and its peculiar mechanical action in the attachment of particles. Sandy soils should be left flat in the fall, and when practicable rolled, to compact their surfaces. The very opposite practice should be pursued with clayey soils, for when they are left rough and ridged, the frequent freezings and thawings of winter render them pulverulent. The opposite action is desirable to bloated and sandy soils.—Working Farmer.

Salt for Cattle.
The Prairie farmer asserts from experience that in the malarious region of the west, more disease may be prevented by salt among cattle, than by any other one thing.
Rowdies Surprised—A Sudden CAPTURE.—Yesterday afternoon, two parties of five rowdies who were running through the streets of the upper part of the town, at the time of a false alarm of fire, got to fighting in Fourth street, near George. Police Marshall Keyser suddenly made his appearance among them, and scattered them in every direction. The Marshall arrested one of the ringleaders, and threw him into a vehicle, drove him to the Remington Hall, and locked him up. He had been put under bonds by Alderman Hambo. His name is Edward McGraw, and he is an adherent of the Hibornia House.—Phila. Sat. Gazette.
A credulous crowd went to the cleric of his parish, and told him of symptoms of great constipation, that he had seen a ghost.
"What'd you see you see it?"
"Why," said Digory, as I was going, I saw your reverencies by the church, right against the wall see the ghost."
"In what shape did it appear?"
"Oh home and hold your tongue," replied the clergyman; "you are a timid creature and have been frightened at your own shadow."

A young man, who had gone to Vicksburg in company with his brother, to see born, wrote the following laconic letter to his father:—Dear dad, times are hard, corn is low, money is scarce, and Bill am dead.
In some battle between the Russians and the Tartars, who are wild sort of people in the north of Asia, a private soldier called out:
"Halloo there! Captain! I've caught a Tartar!"
"Fetch him along then," said the Captain.
"Ay, but he won't let me," said the man; and the fact was the Tartar had caught him. When a man thinks to take another in, and gets bit himself they say, "He's caught a Tartar."
To produce amiability and happiness, the mind and heart must act together; they must be impartial judges, the gentle monitors of the kind encouragers of each other; they are dependent upon each other and we on them.
