A THRILLING SKETCH.

THE GOLDEN CLASP. A modest looking and exceedingly pret. ty young girl, plainly attired, entered one of the goldsmith's stores on ----street, and seeing that a gentleman was engaged with the proprietor, she timidly shrank aside it might be so to others." mear the door until he should be at leisure. The assistants were occupied with customers whose appearance showed them to belong to the class of the rich, and so she was suffered for sometime to remainstanding there, before she could be attended to.
The gentleman, who was a fine, noble address, seeing her waiting, courteously declined the jewel; she laid it on the show stood aside, and said to the goldsmith-

"Do not occupy yourself with me, Mr. Brochard. I can examine these watches by myself while you see what this young person wants, who has been waiting so long and patiently to get an opportunity of addressing you.' And thus speaking, the gentleman stood nside from the show case, on which he she had left upon the show case. had been leaning, to give the young girl an opportunity of advancing.

"What do you wish, Miss?" asked the goldsmith, with a look which conveyed a reproof to her for interrupting him while engaged with a customer of more value to him.

The girl hesitatingly approached the counter and taking from her bosom a small gold clasp, bent over to him, and said, in low, trembling voice-"I wish sir you would be so kind as to keep this for a few days, and let me have even dollars on it." Low as she spoke, her soft, tremulous tones reached the car of Col. M'Henry, the gentleman who was present, and he furned to observe her face, and hear the eply of the goldsmith to this timid and painfully uttered request. The goldsmith took the clasp scornfully between his fing-
