in brief are the terrific facts of the case. It has been clearly shown that the signals were correctly given, and in this case at least, no blame can attach to the bridge-tender. It is admitted on all hands that the arrangements of the board are as Clearfield county, Pa., Mr. Lewis Roberts, bad as intolerably parsimonious mis-management can make them. But we cannot divest ourselves of the idea that by far the greatest degree of culpability is with the conductor, acquitted though he be by the disgraceful verdict of a Connecticut jury. The conductor of a train of cars, holds a situation of responsibility inferior to none that we can conceive of. In his hands the precious lives of passengers are placed and his first principal concern should be, when he is charged with the neglect of important duties, to plead that he vesset are files petical.
