

A Contented Life
By James Mack.
Five hundred dollars I have received—
A rather modest sum—
No matter, I shall be content
When I've a little more.
(At Fifty.)
Well, I am content now—
That's better than before—
And I may well be satisfied
When I've a little more.
(At Fifty.)
Some fifty thousand—pretty well—
But I have earned it sure—
However, I shall not complain
When I've a little more.
(At Sixty.)
One hundred thousand—rich and old—
Ah! life is but a bore!
Yet I can be content to live
When I've a little more.
(At Seventy.)
He dies—and to his greedy heirs
He leaves a countless store;
His wealth has purchased him a tomb—
And very little more. [Howe Journal.]

Remarks on Summer Pruning.
"Pinching" is a term often used in horticultural literature, and is one of those technical words that, although well understood among the initiated, has a very indefinite meaning to the general reader, at least in its horticultural application. Pinching is a mode of summer pruning whereby robust shoots are checked, at an early stage of their growth, by removing their extreme points with a pinch between the thumb and finger; this retards, for a time, their extension, and induces growth in lower buds that would, in all probability have remained dormant. The process is applicable to all trees and plants, and is the best method of securing any desired form of growth or shape of plant, but it is now becoming more associated with the management of fruit and the production of fruit, than it has been heretofore, and its advantages are slowly being recognized.

The great tendency to growth in healthy trees is towards the extreme points of branches, and the prevalent mode of winter pruning, those of robust growth are put back more or less severely. This is done with a view to encourage side or lateral growth, but it is a very imperfect mode of gaining advantages which are more readily secured by judicious, and timely care in summer. A moment's reflection will convince any one that it is at best but a negative practice to allow a tree to make a heavy growth of wood during summer and remove it with the pruning-knife in winter, thus sacrificing and throwing away as useless what has been the great aim of the cultivator to produce. There are exceptions where winter pruning will be absolutely a necessity; in young trees, for instance, it is evident that a healthy, vigorous and extended system of roots is of paramount importance. Sickly, or weak growing trees, will also be rendered more vigorous by cutting the branches well down in winter but when the tree is well established, it is perfectly practicable to maintain its productiveness, and induce it to assume any desired form by pinching during the season of active growth, and we hesitate not to assert, that the highest point in the culture and management of fruit trees will not have been reached, until this principle has become fully recognized and generally acted upon.

Even in an economical point of view with reference to labor, it is obvious that a saving will be gained by rubbing off a bud in June, instead of having to cut a branch in December. Indeed the amputating of large branches is altogether obviated, and the nutriment which would have been appropriated by such, is absorbed by the branches retained. Trees vary so much in their habits of growth and are so susceptible to the influences of soil and climate, that no definite practical rules can be given even by the most expert, that would form a safe guide to the novice in tree culture. It is a matter of individual experience and observation; no amount of explanatory information will convey more than the necessity for the recognition of the general principle, and that once firmly established in the mind, and the theory thoroughly understood, the cultivator will readily acquire the discriminating knowledge which always follows practical experience and close observation.

One of the most common errors in summer pruning, and one that is also extremely injurious, is that of delaying the operation until growth has made considerable advance, and then in order to secure the emission of shoots at certain points a severe diminution of active foliage is the consequence. We have seen grape-vines thus treated, [allowed to proceed unchecked until the middle of July, and then a foot or more taken from the end of each shoot,] that were completely paralyzed and the crop a total failure, the berries remaining green until overtaken by frost. It is such occurrences as the above that give rise to the many apparently conflicting statements that abound in our horticultural and agricultural literature. A course of practice is undertaken without a proper knowledge of the system or the principles upon which it is founded, and when failures occur, they are seldom attributed to their proper source.

The perfection of summer pruning then, consists in checking the growth of particular shoots without diminishing the foliage; when the extreme point of a branch is pinched, growth will be checked without the removal of leaves. Nothing is more certain than this, that the welfare of the crop depends upon a full growth of healthy foliage.—Farmer and Gardener.

PROVERBS WORTH PRESERVING.—Hasty people drink the wine of life scalding hot.—Death is the only master who takes his servants without a character.—Content is the mother of good digestion.—When pride and poverty marry together, their children are want and crime.—Where hard work kills ten, idleness kills a hundred men.—Folly and pride walk side by side.—He that borrows binds himself with his neighbor's rope.—He that is too good for good advice, is too good for his neighbor's company.—Friends are always at home to those that call.—The firmest friends ask the fewest favors.

It is said that a girl in England was struck dumb by the firing of a cannon.—Since then a number of married men have invited the artillery to come and discharge their pieces on their premises. The horrid wretches!
