

Alone with the Dying.

It would be difficult to find in the whole range of fiction a more affecting incident than is contained in the following extract from a letter written by a British seaman to his wife. It was his first service as a soldier, he having been sent on shore with a boat's crew of marines to silence a fort, and take some guns.

"We dispersed at a few hundred yards distance from the beach to keep the coast clear while the boat's crew made prizes of the guns. The enemy had advantage of the wood, and also knowing the country well, and a troop of them in advance. We were ordered to fire. I took steady aim and fired at my man at about sixty yards. He fell like a stone. At the same time a broadside from the went in among the trees, and the enemy disappeared, we could scarcely tell how. I felt as though I must go up to him and see whether he was dead or alive. He lay quite still, and I was more afraid of him lying so than when he stood facing me a few minutes before. It is a strange feeling to come over you all at once that you have killed a man. He had unbuttoned his jacket, and was pressing his hand over the front of his chest, where the wound was. He breathed hard and the blood poured from the wound, and also from his mouth, every breath he took. His face was as white as death, and his eyes looked so big and bright as he turned them and stared at me. I shall never forget it. He was a fine young fellow, not more than five and twenty. I went down on my knees beside him, and my breast felt so full as though my own heart would burst. He had a real English face and did not look like an enemy. What I felt I can never tell; but if my life could have saved his, I believe I should have given it. I laid his head on my knee, and he grasped hold of my hand and tried to speak but his voice was gone. I could not tell a word he said, and every time he went to speak the blood poured out so, I knew it would soon be over. I am not ashamed to say that I was worse than he, for he never shed a tear, and I couldn't help it. His eyes were closed when a gun was fired from the boat to order aboard, and that aroused him. He pointed to the beach, where the boat was just pushing off with the guns which he had taken, and where our marines were waiting to man the second boat, and then he pointed to the wood where the enemy was concealed. Poor fellow! he little thought how I had shot him down. I was wondering how I could leave him to die, and no one near him, when he had something like a convulsion for a moment, and then his face rolled over, and without a sigh he was gone. I trust the Almighty has received his soul. I laid his head gently down on the grass and left him. It seemed so strange when I looked at him for the last time, I somehow thought of everything I had heard about the Turks, and the Russians; and the rest of them, but all that seemed so far off and the dead man so near."

A Husband and Father.

A young man and his wife were prepared to attend a Christmas party at the house of a friend some miles distant. "Henry my dear husband, don't drink too much at the party to-day; you will promise me, won't you?" said she putting her hand upon his brow, and raising her eyes to his face with a pleading glance.

"No, Millie, I will not; you may trust me." And he wrapped his infant boy in a soft blanket, and they proceeded. The horses were soon prancing over the turf, and pleasant conversation beguiled the way.

"Now don't forget your promise," whispered the young wife, as she passed up the steps. Poor thing! she was the wife of a man who loved to look upon the wine when it was red. But his love for his wife and babe, whom they both idolized, kept him back, and it was not often that he joined in the bacchanalian revelries.

The party passed off pleasantly, the time for departing drew near, and the wife descended from the upper chamber to join her husband. A pang shot through the trusting heart as she met him, for he was intoxicated—he had broken his promise.

Silently they rode homeward, save when the drunken man would break into snatches of song, or unmeaning laughter. But the wife rode on, her babe pressed closely on her griefed heart. "Give me the babe, Millie, I can't trust you with him," said he, as they approached a dark and somewhat swollen stream, which they had to ford.

After some hesitation, she resigned her first-born, her darling babe, closely wrapped in the great blanket, to his arms. Over the dark waters the noble steed safely bore them, and when they reached the bank the mother asked for the child.

With much care and tenderness he placed the bundle in her arms, but when she clasped it to her bosom, no babe was there! It had slipped from the blanket, and the drunken father knew it not. A wild shriek from the mother aroused him, and he turned just in time to see the little rose face rise one moment above the dark waves, then sink forever.

What a spectacle! the idol of his heart gone—gone forever! and that, too by his own intemperance. The anguish of the mother, and the remorse of the father, are better imagined than described.

Judge B. was once obliged to "double" with an Irishman, in a crowded hotel when the following conversation ensued: "Pat, you would have remained a long time in the old country before you could have slept with a Judge, would you not?" "Yis yer honor," said Pat, "and I think yer honor would have been a long time in the old country before y'd been a Judge, too."

A lover once wrote to a lady who rejected him, saying that he intended to retire to "some secluded spot, and breathe away life in sighs." To which the lady replied by asking whether they were to be of medium or large size. The man has not since been heard from.

Fanny Fern says if one-half of the girls knew the previous life of the men they marry, the list of old maids would be wonderfully increased. If the men knew, Fanny, what their future lives were to be, wouldn't it increase the list of old maids still further.

Garibaldi was born on the 4th of July, 1807. Americans are interested in noticing this fact.
