According to information form shed by the corto Congress. On Sunday, the let, Mr. Seward happened by some means to get hold of the Report, and of course submits it to the President .-It was forthwith agreed to hold a meeting of the Roport had been sent, under date of 2d instant, In these words . "The President wishes all packages marked 'not to be opened till message is read,' sent to him. Reclaim any you have delinered."

The Cabinet again met on Monday evening, when, as stated by the aforesaid correspondent, in the Message, verbatim, and the President's modify his report, and up to 11 o'clack on Tuesday night it was thought that either Cameron of Seward would have to leave the Cabinet. It was finally settled by the President insisting upon Gen. Cameron to confine his report to a simple statement of the facts, and not to attempt to dictate to Congress-to wait until Congress would act. Cameron, while insisting on the correctness | ical change of opinion. of his policy, finally consented to the alteration, was expurgated.

It thus appears that the dispute was not final by settled-but, in effect, referred to Congress, Should Congress refuse to back up Cameron by passing an emancipation act, of course Mr. Camfashioned veto?

But this did not suppress the views of Mr. In other words, in Mr. Cameron's view, the Government cannot "maintain its existence" enless this policy is adopted.

If we have space we will endeavor to publish both versions of the report next week.

The Postmaster General, in his re port to Congress, seems to claim no legal anthority for prohibiting the circulation of certain newspapers through the mails, and assisting to suppress their publication. But he attempts to justify his conduct on the plea of self-preservation, and makes himself both Judge and Jury in the case.

The law of self-preservation might do If the P. M. General had shown wherein Congress had, by any set, authorized him so to do, in any event, or that the Constipress; but he does not attempt either, and is thereby self-condemned.
