

A DOUBTING HEART.—Where are the swallows that I have seen...

The sun has hid its rays.—These many days; Will dreary hours never leave the earth?

Fair hope is dead, and light Is quenched in night.

What sound can break the silence of despair? O doubting heart!

And angel's silver voices still the air.

Now the world is God's great post-office, where everything is turmoil and apparent disorder.

Religion comes to teach us that above every man's wisdom there is a divine Providence.

Take hold of my hand.—Take hold of my hand, says the little one, when she reaches a slippery place.

THE MINISTER.—Some would make the minister a student; some a visiting pastor; some a public speaker.

The Deak.—The post is all holy to us; the cat are all holy, even they that were lame and weak when alive.

THE CAPTIVES AT RICHMOND.—The Condition of the Federal Prisoners in the hands of the Enemy.

The Philadelphia Inquirer publishes a number of letters from Federal soldiers.
