

PHANTOM... BY EDWARD L. ...

There are more guests at the table than the host invited...

We have no title deeds to begeth the owners and occupants of the mansions...

The spirit world round this world of sense floats like an atmosphere...

Our little lives are kept in equipoise by opposite attractions and desires...

The persecutions, the peripatetic, of earthly exile and inspirations high...

And as the moon from some dark gate of cloud, throws o'er the sea's floating bridge of light...

So from the world of spirits these descends a bridge of light, connecting it with this...

PEACE.—They who, in their anxiety to overcome political antagonisms, mock at the very idea of peace, make a grand mistake...

These denunciations are all wrong, and all tend to the injury and discredit of those who use them...

Peace is not only desirable, but it is the prayer of every good man in the land...

It is every part of the land to-day are mourning, who remember the peaceful days of old with sorrowful emotion...

Who look for the peaceful days to come with unutterable anxiety and impatience...

The men who refuse to accept the first opening proposal of peace, who endeavor to prevent a peace, except only such a one as suits their partisan objects...

These men will not be able to sustain themselves in the presence of the people...

We have not fought to accomplish party ends, however much we may have been misled in the war by partisans...

But we have fought for the Union, and whenever the Union can be saved, by compromise or otherwise, then it must be saved...

Let us hope that the politician who stands in the way of that Peace—Journal of Commerce.
