Corry O'Leary at the Oil Regions. I have reached the land of oil, having taken a safer rout than the Erie. Pennsylvania is a good sized State, and it takes some time to get there.

When you do get here you wish you had not come. There is plenty of oil—and that is all except lots of people.

I am for "Snake Run," the most likely place for oil. They call these places runs because every person who is after oil runs here.

Every man you meet is a president, director or engineer of a petroleum company. The natives, who are white people, resemble country folks, live by selling land to greenhorns.

They have a system in both transactions. They double the price of land every morning. If you know anybody who has got a couple of vacant lots that he wants to sell tell him to bring them out here.

The folks are so busy looking for oil they have no time to build houses, and everybody is afraid to put up a house for fear he might cover an oil well.

Consequently the hotels are a little crowded. The Muggins house where I put up is much so.

Muggins, the proprietor, is the most accommodating man you ever saw. A city railroad conductor isn't a circumstance to him.

He has only got six beds in the house but he is always ready to take in everybody. He took me in.

Also two hundred more petroleum pilgrims. The sleeping accommodations are various. We go to bed on pantaloons.

When the first pantaloons get asleep they are carefully taken out and hung on a clothes-line. The second pantaloons go through the same process, until everybody is provided for.

Referring to sleep alone, I slept on the mantle piece with the coal scuttle for a pillow. As I observed land is precious out here.

I bought a lot ten inches by four, for ten hundred thousand dollars, and commenced operations. The next thing is to commence boring.
