Meligious Miscellany.

YOUTHFUL TRAINING .- In the relious nurture of children we should address ourselves far more than we do If paid after three and before ex months, to the sentiment of beauty in their If paid after the expiration of six months, minds. We are eager to fill our homes with beautiful and costly objects, but are slow to fill our minds and theirs a times, with beautiful thoughts. We are im- Autitors' notices, each, patient to clothe ourselves and them in the finest apparel, but we are altogether too patient of repulsive habits and deforming dispositions. We want to see ourselves and make them see that hearty tage, and a lower term and the second to th wrong are utterly ugly. We need to see for ourselves, and help them to feel the unspeakable attractives. al beauty, the lovliness of truth, the charm of a sweet forgiving spirit, and charm of a sweet forgiving spirit, and the spiender of self-sacrifice; that every had habit is a sin against taste type, or with cats, or each plain style, will be and beauty, as well as an offence charged double the above rates for space. and beauty, as well as an offence against the Holy Ghost; that a soul full of Christian goodness is as superior to a pretty face and showy dress Single quire, as a summer sunrise among the mountains excels any landscape of Church or Landseer. And these lessons can i sheet, and ought to be taught and illustrated at all times. The bowed head is not a prayer, but that posture is in accordance with the best taste and usage, and this attitude of devotion of itself ealls up devout and prayerful thoughts and we are more likely to pray thus than when gazing about the room. Let everything in the room and the service be designed and ordered with a view to awaken the love of beauty, and especially moral and spiritul beauty, in children. Let them learn to associate religion with taste, refinement, parity and propriety. Let wm. a. wallace, beauty and goodness be always connected with each other in their lessons and services and experience; and they will come to love goodness as beauty, and live in the good they love. Christmas.-It is well to celebrate the birth of a great and holy soul into earth and time; for all true rememing and revering bring us into closer communion and completer harmony with his greatness and holiness. And in the case of Christ, let us remember and celebrate, not on the 25th of December only, but every day, what he did and what he was. We would not diminish the volume nor detract from the splendor of the praise that rolls up for the splendor of the praise that rolls up that he can render satisfaction. Feb. 63 if. from thousands of churches and homes and hearts on that great occasion. Only let not our reverence and praise find its only vent in pomp and festivity. Let not our praise escape in lip-homage and float off in ineffectual waves of sound on the undulating air. We honor Christ most by trying to be like him. We praise him most by doing most for men, for truth, for jus tice, for God. We celebrate him best by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the prisoner, uplitting the fallen, and breaking the bread of life to those in the shadow of spiritual image, and taking on the features of his sublime faith, his all-conquering trust, his fidelity to duty, his spirit of love and sacrifice, and his oneness with the Father.

NOT EXCITEMENT, BUT PIETY .-Preaching that stirs us up to a sense of the peril of men under the law, and it, possesses a great power for a time; but these feelings quickly wear out. It is impossible for even the best of people to live long under the influence an excited conscience. They cannot bear it a great while. A reaction is sure to come. What we need is to be brought into a more fervent love of win and rests on Christ; then the church will have food, not for forty days, but for forty years. We need an average level of feeling and actions many times higher than at present, where the feelings grow out of a higher class in MANILA ROPE. jan 31-6 of Christian experience, which does THOMAS H. PORCEE - - - A. A. GRAMAN not wear out. These promote health, and never leave the body and mind to that langour which necessarily succeeds excitement. They keep up the general Merchandise and Lumber, spiritual tone, and make Christian [jan3]. Grahamton, Penn'a. work hearty and constant- a "needs strew the path of life with flowers. It requires no stronger effort than to plant thorns and briars. Is it not strange that we bend all our efforts in cultivating those plants which afford no pleasure but on the content. strew the path of life with flowers ford no pleasure, but, on the contrary, J. R. M'MURRAY. ford no pleasure, but, on the contrary, abridge our happiness; while we suffer to spring up, spontaneously, the few strange flowers that occasionally thrown smile along our way? It need the contract of the thrown smile along our way? It need not be thus. The few happy men around us should teach us an imporportant lesson. There is no reason in the world why we should not be as happy as they. If we would look on the path of life as a road, we must cultivate ourselves, and go diligently about it. Less frequently would we have cause to mourn over the bitter past, or the dark and cloudy present. If our years have run thus far to waste, let us with care influence the future, and with all care and attention cultivate those fruits and flowers that will yield a harvest of agreeable pleasure.

DISCOURAGED .- We doubt not that there will be seasons, even in the happiest Christian pilgrimage, when the soul will be "discouraged because of the way." When difficulties which we thought had passed over, will reappear; when temptations, which we ped had been forever vanquished, will again rise up against us; when sins, which we trusted we had forsaken will once more mar our path; and these things will lead us to feel a deep sensation of despondency; we shall be tempted to think that God cannot pardon delinquencies so fre-quent and unprovoked, and that we shall certainly perish on the journey, and never arrive at that journey's blissful end. Let us be careful that such feelings lead us not into temptation; that they do not close our hearts against the infinity of God's mercy in

One of the saddest things about human nature is, that a man may guide others in the path of life without walking in it himself; that he may be a pilot, and yet a eastaway.

To the true Christian there should be the times of the times be no exercise so sweet to his soul as that of secret communion with God.
