Ever is just.

It is a good life, within and without that makes us fitting instruments for the divine hand, or, as we sometimes express it, polished shafts in God's quiver. A good lite is beautiful. It holds the observer's eye as with a charm. It begets a disposition to pry into its sources. It raises the wonder how men can live so nobly, and excites the wish, the longing to be good. How many thousands upon thousands have thus been drawn to Christ? To them the crucified and risen Christ was nothing. They knew him not. But they have seen his representatives, and have learned from whence the divine comes to man. They would be like their friend, and that friend tells them that he has his life from COAL OIL LAMPS AND LANTERNS. I ORSE SHOES & HORSE SHOE another; that his goodness is only the semblance and reflection of another's; that none is truly good save one. And besides this fitness, as of a magnet, to draw to Christ—this being a thing of beauty to win for Him—he becomes by a good life a fitting instrument for aggression. He who can challenge the confidence of his fellows has a license to improve and warn. He whose life is hid with Christ in God is moved to industry by his zeal for God. Repulse will not dishearten, nor disappointment chill him. But let us remember a good life is more than a steady one, more than a quiet and in-

Nothing has given me so much pain as to see you on such bad terms with life. You will find how far sweeter it is when one knows how to manage Order in your thoughts is for you the beginning of Lappiness; little by little, everything will shape, barmon-ize, and arrange itself in your existence; you will resemble our clock which strikes very well in fine weath Long may it last, this fine weather that shines on you now; and when the frost of discouragement threatens | Carpenters and Builders will find in our estabto attack you, attack it as you have already done. He who can give one blow can give ten, can give a thousand.

"There is no greater mistake," says an eminent living divine, "than to sup-pose that Christians can impress the world by agreeing with it. No! it is not conformity that we want; it is not being able to beat the world in its own way; but it is to stand apart and above it, and to produce the impression of a holy and a seperated life—this only can give us a true Christian power." These are golden words. We commend them to our readers who profess to be Christ's "peculiar people."

Why should what one loves be so distant, and what one loves not always so near? It is because nothing in the world goes quite as one would have it. Happiness and unhappiness, pain and pleasure, walk band-in-hand. After the greeting comes the farewell—that sad farewell which one has to say to everything; first of all one's doll, then to one's eighteen years, then to this, then to that; but the saddest of all is the farewell of departure, ospecially to a kind, tender friend.

Our duties are not so very lofty; God places them within the reach of there who cannot pray, give alms, comfort others, take care of parents, bring up children? Which of us canmen, not of angels. Which of us is not struggle with his inclinations, overcome his tastes, cease to do evil, learn to do well? Is there anything in this that transcends human powers? And this is Christian life, the love of God, which is nothing more than the fulfillment of our every duty.

in the country. However occupied one may be, 'tis with nothing that on grosses the mind, which works away on its own account like a mill-wheel. Let us try to make it turn to some purpose, give it a good grain to grind, yelld us what we intrust to it; let our memory be filled with beautiful things, and our thoughts will be beautiful things, and our thoughts will be beautiful things, and our thoughts will be beautiful things.
