

Religious Miscellany.

PARABLES.—One who was on board the ill famed "Commodore," says that "she rolled fearfully, tugging with the chains as if eager for self-destruction."

The religion of Christ is distinguished from all others by its great fruitfulness and joyfulness in private experience.

The man who holds and expends money is merely the clerk of the man who enjoys and profits by what money buys.

Present to an ordinary man the maxim, "Love your enemies," and you may hear him sigh as he answers that the saying is divine; and he fears that he will never practice it.

Few minds are spacious; few even have a vacant place in them. Almost all have capacities that are narrow and occupied by some knowledge which stops them up.

Everything is very spiritual, and wherein the soul has truly a part, recalls us to God, to piety. The soul cannot move, wake, or open its eyes, without seeing God.

Falseness of mind comes from falseness of heart; it proceeds from one's having secretly for aim one's own opinion, and not the true opinion. The false mind is false in everything, as a squinting eye looks always obliquely.

We should speak to men of destruction only to make them think of duration, and of death only to make them think of life; for death runs in to life, and destruction precipitates itself into duration.

It is with our thoughts as with our flowers—those that are simple in expression carry their seed with them; those that are double though rich and pomp charm the mind but produce nothing.

Happy are they who have a lyre in the heart, and in the mind a music which their actions excite! Their whole life will have been a harmony in unison with the eternal tones.

This life is but the cradle of the other. What is then sickness, time, old age, death—different degrees of a metamorphosis which doubtless has here below only its beginning?

Let us be men with men, and always children before God; for in his eyes we are but children. Old age itself, in presence of eternity, is but the first moment of a morning.

The god of metaphysics is but an idea; but the God of religion, the Creator of heaven and earth, the Sovereign Judge of actions and of thoughts, is a power.

Vice and ignorance are the necessary companions of each other; and we can no more reverse it than we can reverse the stars in their courses.

Nature has made two kinds of excellent minds: the one to produce beautiful thoughts and beautiful actions, the other to admire them.

How many people make themselves abstract to appear profound. The greatest part of abstract terms are shadows that hide a vacuum.

Instead of complaining that the rose has thorns, I congratulate myself that the thorn is surmounted by roses, and that the bush bears flowers.

The triumph of woman is not to wear out and conquer their persecutors, but to soften them and make them lay down their arms.

We comprehend the earth only when we have known heaven. Without the spiritual world the material world is a disheartening enigma.

In the spirit of the Christian there is a perpetual spring-tide, and in the wintry valleys he hears the ripple of over-flowing streams.

There are heads that have windows, and that daylight cannot strike from above. Nothing comes into them from heaven.

Order is the co-ordination of means to the end, of parts to the whole, of work to the model, of reward to merit.

There are souls transparent and pure, whose lives are like a sunbeam that sports in a drop of dew.

Heaven rarely grants to the same man the gift of thinking well, and of acting well in all things.

We measure minds by their stature; it would be better to estimate them by their beauty.

We would choose for a wife only the woman we should choose for a friend were she a man.

Slender is the source of malignity.

A Great Discovery. ONE of the greatest and most useful discoveries in medical science was made by the celebrated Dr. J. Dupuis, of Paris, Chief Physician to the Imperial Laboratory of France, in 1861. Those who have been afflicted with the painful disease known as Piles, and especially cured by the use of DR. DUMA'S FRENCH PILE SALVE, cannot speak too highly of the benefits conferred upon them by the use of this remedy. It has never been known to fail in effecting a permanent cure in a single case. In this respect it surpasses all other medicines of the kind. It will do just what it is recommended for; if not, the money will be refunded. One or two boxes is sufficient to effect a permanent cure in four or six days, if the directions on the boxes are followed. Price, one and two dollars per box, according to size.
