

Religious Miscellany.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends, Rough-hew them how we will.

If we would be among the good in future life, we must seek goodness here.

To maintain allegiance all our lives long to the devil, and then turn our backs upon him at the last, because it will pay, is mean, and I think that heaven receives no mean people.

The best things of an unbelieving man are all in this life. The nearer he draws to the grave, the worse his condition. The moment he dies, the worst things begin, and continue for evermore.

When the worldly man dies, his sun sets, and he rises no more. When the true Christian dies, his sun rises, and he shines on to eternity.

The other world is only the inside of which this is the outside; and we shall differ there from what we are here, only by having the dust brushed off from us, so that others shall see more distinctly what we really are.

Until we are utterly empty of self, we are not ready to be filled by God, until we are conscious of our own weakness, we are not fit platforms for the display of the divine omnipotence.

Now, doing according to the common interpretation of things is not enough. What is done must be done cheerfully, gracefully, beautifully.

Yet a little while, and the believers shall part forever with sin. They shall no longer have to crucify the flesh with its affections and lusts.

While in this world we take rank by reason of some condition of wealth or nobility, we shall, doubtless, in a spiritual world, take rank by reason of our spiritual condition.

Christians, get your thoughts to be well exercised; be much in thinking; think of the goodness and kindness, holiness and compassion of the Lord.

EVERY DAY RELIGION.—We must come back to our point, which is not to urge all of you to give yourselves to mission work, but to serve God more and more in connection with your daily callings.

There is such an idea of being a Christian as ought to bow every man's head in reverence and in obedience to it. I do not ask you to be a Christian for the sake of escaping from destruction; I do not ask you to be a Christian that you may obtain a kind of policy of insurance.
