

Religious Miscellany.

God, when he worketh, worketh like a God. As a king gives not stintedly, like a beggar, so God, in his gifts, is not so restrained.

There—Some good people are inclined to contemplation when the call is urgent for stirring activity. Such persons might well be reminded of what a zealous layman for the West once said to an old church at the East: "You sit here and sing yourselves away to everlasting bliss; but I tell you, you are wanted a great deal more out in Illinois than you are in heaven."

Prayer—When a pump is frequently used, little pains are necessary to have water; the pump pours out at the first stroke, because the water is high. But if the pump has not been used for a long time, the water gets low; and when you want it, you must pump it a long while, and the water only comes after great efforts.

The Jews wanted a sign, and the Greeks wanted philosophy; but the Apostle says, I preach Christ crucified; and this, in its full disclosure, is at once the highest element of divine power and of divine philosophy.

It is declared everywhere in the New Testament—not so much declared as assumed—that the heart is sinful. The apparent fact that the whole creation groans and travails in pain is argument enough on that subject.

In eternity it will be a terrible thing for many a man to meet his own prayers. Their very language will condemn him; for he knew his duty and did it not. Those fervent prayers which the good man has labored to make effectual, will be "silencing ones" in white raiment, to conduct their author into the banqueting house of the great King.

Who is the prophet that shall uncover the hyssops of our acted lives, and pour adequate shame on our mutual impositions? Smiles on our faces, with envy and jealousy underneath; cordiality in our grasp, with no connecting nerve between the fingers and the heart; deference in our professions, with no suitable esteem, no genuine respect, no sacred sincerity; invitations issued, with a fraud lurking in their politeness, getting the company together by one falsehood; greetings of indiscriminate and extravagant welcome receiving them with another; fashions made up of composite illusions, ornamenting them with another ceremony of an elaborate make believe; sustainer their meek dignity with another; and dishonest regrets at the farwell dismissing them with another—who will dare to affirm that these do not enter appealingly into the staple of what we call civilized and elegant life?

Family Courtships.—In the family the law of pleasing ought to extend from the highest to the lowest. You are bound to please your children, and your children are bound to please each other; and you are bound to please your servants, if you expect them to please you. Some men are pleasant in their own homes, and nowhere else. I have known such men. They were good fathers and kind husbands. If you had seen them in their own homes, you would have thought they were almost angels; but if you had seen them in the streets, or in the counting-house, or anywhere else outside of their own home, you would have thought them almost devils.
