A Plea for Some Unfortunates.
In determining how best the Democracy shall use the fruits of their great victories, their peculiar position as a party must not be overlooked. It is the only great political organization which has survived the shock of the war. Of the parties in existence in 1860, it alone now lives. What was the Union party in 1860 afterwards became the Republican, and even that exists only in name, so changed are its sentiments. The Constitutional Union party, or Bell-Everett organization, with its good intentions, is extinct. Along the rock of Democracy—

Lifts its awful form,
Swells from the vale and midway breathes the storm.
The Democratic organization, preserved through years of darkness, doubt, and despair, by a few brave, bold souls, is, therefore, at present, the only refuge for those flying from the horrors of Radicalism. It is the sole, safe harbor and asylum for the many good men who start back appalled from the goal which Phillips, Stevens, and Greeley point out to them. By the fact, however, of its being the only existing opposition to Radicalism, its ultimate success, though no less inevitable, is in some measure retarded. It cannot be denied that many now remain within the Republican pale, merely because there is no other fold to receive them if they left than the Democracy. There is a large class of temperaments, of whom we wish to speak respectfully, who cannot stand strong food and bright lights of any kind. To such the Democratic party is at present distasteful. They recoil from Radicalism, but they cannot stand strong food and bright lights of any kind. They would willingly leave the former, but they are not hardy enough yet for the latter. So they stand trembling within the Republican lines, either not voting at all, or else hesitatingly, and from the force of habit supporting a policy whose results they dare not look in the face. The Bell-Everett party was a congenial fold for this large class, for such we believe it to be. There they could air their conservatism, without bringing it in contact with the dreaded Democracy.

Its tint was neutral. It abhorred positive colors. It was neither for nor against slavery. The territorial question it preferred not to be aware of. Stabene was its motto. And its request to anxious enquirers—the race of "earnest men" had not in those days arisen—was, "do not tell us anything disagreeable." Its range was not very distinct or sharply defined, but it had generally the Constitution and the Union and the Flag, and all those conventionalities, and in it one could lie down and sleep and be happy, nor dread the rude alarms of its more pronounced antagonists. Of course the quivering, fiftal light which this colorless flame gave forth was soon blown out by the force of the war. Its component parts went according to their affinities. A few of the bravest came over to the Democracy, but a large mass fled shivering back, under cover of loyalty, to the Republicans. During the hot passions of the strife, all elements were sublimated into the patriotic gas. No precipitates of conservatism were permitted to form. Now the heat is dead or dying. Condensation is taking place, and all the little crystals of conservatism, of dread of Radicalism, and of humanity, are beginning to appear in the social crucible.

The furnace of war being out, there is no longer any power to keep together these diverse temperaments, and the Conservative element, which can only combine with Radicalism at a high temperature, is slowly but surely depositing itself. To drop the chemical metaphor, that portion of the Republican party which respects law, order, and the white race, is trying to get away from its uncongenial past without exactly knowing how best to do it. The duty, then, of the Democracy is a very plain one. While it adheres unflinchingly to every plank in its time-honored platform, it must respect this tendency and these scruples, and assist them out of their dilemma. It must not frighten them off. A tone of ferre, which was proper enough not long ago, in repelling the insolent aggressions, would be much out of place now. A flippant causticity or contempt for those who have not yet mounted to the brazen atmosphere in which we breathe, will not attract them up to our altitude. We are thoroughly confident that we are right, and it is impossible that we cannot make our position every day more approachable to these reluctant party-less but party-seeking souls. While we cannot descend to them, we certainly can smooth their path, and remove obstacles from their track. Every day their own allies will develop to them such traits as will be more and more repulsive. In the meantime, we, without offending their pride of opinion, or rubbing up their prejudices, may, by judicious behavior and accommodation, educate them gradually out of their weaknesses, until finally they will come not only to eat, but to relish the olive of Democracy whilom so repugnant—Age.

General McClellan has decided to remain in Europe for some months longer, and cannot, therefore, be expected at home this Fall, or Winter. The family of General McClellan returned to New York last week by the Scotia, having left General McClellan and family in London; the latter were expecting to go to the continent in a few days.

SCENE FOR A PICTURE.—The "Radical" leaders and Congressmen seated on a platform, placed on the heads of Southern lackeys, who are unwittingly approaching a mighty precipice, singing "Old John Brown." The Radicals seeing their danger, are writhing in agony, tearing their hair, and frantically appealing to Grant to save them, while the General quietly sits smoking his cigar.
