

THE WALLACE TESTIMONIAL.

(Concluded from first page)
own labor, and fairly started him in the race of life, he can ask no more; and if I rightly understand the temper of the people, he will receive no more. He is not and cannot be our equal, either politically or socially. In all those departments of labor requiring skill, intellect and energy, the white man has and will keep his superiority. In the domain of agriculture, directed by the brain of our race; in those branches of labor in which strength and sinew are more needed than intellect and skill, and in the various pursuits in which initiative faculties and habit make proficiency, the black can and may find his appropriate field; and if the two races be permitted to adjust their own relative positions, unmolested by legal regulations or despotic requirements, the negro may yet be made happy and useful. The efforts now being made to give him political power serve but to injure him. The prejudices of caste are stronger against him after freedom than before. For more than eighty years they have been free in Pennsylvania, but they are still regarded as our inferiors and refuse participation in the Government. Our people will not assent to their equality; prejudice seems to become strengthened with time, for under the old Constitution suffrage was not confined to the white, whilst under the new one it is expressly limited to our race. They are as degraded and servile here as in any part of the South; they are comparatively few in numbers, and it would scarce seem that they could rouse antagonism, and that mingling of races might occur here, if at all; but this has not happened, and they are still repulsive to our nature. During that time every one of the European races has mingled its blood with ours, and aided in making up our population; they alone are isolated.

Under this policy our Commonwealth has grown and prospered, until three and half millions of people yield obedience to her laws, and aid in maintaining her prosperity and her fame. Her rich valleys and her rugged mountain teem with an industrious and energetic people. Cities, towns and hamlets dot her surface in every section. Marks of taste, of wealth, and of intellectual advancement are abundant. Side by side the school house and the church spire speak of duty to man and adoration to Deity. The elements are harnessed and compelled to aid in dragging riches from the earth, and valley and mountain, river and hillside made to echo with the shriek of the engine. The evidences of energy, of industrial enterprise, and of valuable production are everywhere apparent. These are the proofs of our triumphs, the trophies of our race won in the war with matter; they are the results of a policy that was founded in nature, and adopted in wisdom. Our right to adopt it was as clear as is our right to local self-government; and the same right belongs equally to every State as fully and exclusively as it did to our own. Nature, wisdom, and experience will teach them, as it has taught us, that the political power of the State should be wielded by the white race alone. Our material wants and pecuniary interest require that the negro accept a subordinate position, and in refusing this, he will be requested to move on.

A system of finance that has ignored the world's standard of value; a system of progress that has violated the distinctions of race and outraged the instincts of our humanity, and a system of governmental policy that in the name of freedom has trampled upon every privilege dear to freedom, and through the terms of a written Constitution, crushed out the very spirit that gave them life and efficacy; have brought to their authors their punishment in their successors, and an oppressed and tax-burdened people, whose resources have been wasted, whose commerce is expiring, turn in prayer for relief to THE CONSTITUTION OF THEIR FATHERS AND THE FEDERAL UNION OF THE STATES.

Speeches were also made by Ex-Governor Bigler, Hon. George W. Woodward, Judges W. A. Porter and A. V. Parsons, Hon. Richard Yaux, Gen. Robert Patterson, John Hulme, Esq., Col. Charles J. Bidde; and letters were read from Gov. Stevenson, of Kentucky, Hon. John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts, Hon. Geo. H. Pendleton, of Ohio, Hon. Chas. K. Boyle, of Pennsylvania, and Hon. T. E. Hendricks, of Indiana; and at the conclusion, three times three cheers were given for the grand old Democratic party.

Never was there a social gathering of the same number more honored by the presence of distinguished statesmen, the ablest of jurists, and the prominence of its guests generally, than this, and long in the "weema hours" of the night was it kept up, the guests determined that an opportunity so rare for social intercourse should have justice done it. In every particular it was a success, and did honor to its managers, and will serve as a souvenir of happy recollections to those who attended over after.

Stanton, in his testimony before the impeachment committee, says, in regard to Booth's intention: "I directed it to be made under lock and key, to prevent any glorification over his grave by the disloyal, and that at the proper time I suppose it will be given to his friends."

Hon. Louis W. Hall, of Altoona, well known to many of our readers, was, on Monday the 26th ult., married to Miss Eliza Warford, of Harrisburg. She is a niece of Gen. Cameron. Mr. Hall and his bride have sailed for Europe, where they intend remain until spring.

There are twelve thousand five hundred public journals in the world. America has five thousand, and all Europe only seven thousand. Twelve million sheets are issued daily.
