George W. Ash-burn, a notable Radical lender among the negroes, was killed by parties un-known in a negro boarding house last aight. Ashburn was a native Georgian, an overseer before the war, and remarkable for his cruelty. In the early part of the war he was a violent ssionist, but immediately after the war became an equally violent reconstructionist. He was an ignorant, brutal man, with no social influence, and at once found his equal among the negroes whom he aspired to lead by appeals to their passions.
