"Mother, mother, I have made one heavt happy to-day," said little Willie, as he came bounding in from school one levely summer afternoon, and threw his arms about her neck, imprinting a sweet kiss upon her nale check. "Yes mother, I have made one heart happy to-day"-and his lit-tle bosom heaved with an honest pride and delight, which caused his bright eyes to sparkle, and a rosy smile to play upon his dimpled cheek. Little Willie was a bright active boy, on whose loving countenance seven summers had smiled, leaving new beauties as their visible impress and a reward for the warm heart beating beneath. His widowed mother, on whom the whole care of his training from infancy had devolved, was called to exercise great discretion properly to earb his naturally hasty temper, and to bring it into due subjection to wholesome restraint, and thus mould it for the accomplishment of some noble end in life-to love rather than to hate-to do good rath or than evil. And well had the mother dene her task. He was a child of many prayers and much faithful instruction, and the good seed thus sown unsparingly, and watered with a mother's tears, had fallen in good soil, and was just beginning to spring up with a promise of an abundant harvest. The oft-repeated counsel that he ought always to try to make some heart happy each day had for once been heeded, and she rejoiced in the thought, and inwardly thanked her heavenly Father that she had lived to see her darling boy so loving and dutiful as he had been of late and especially this happy day. "Are you sure, Willie," she said after a slight pause, "you have made one heart happy to day?"

ORVIS "Yes, mother; she said so, and thanked me, oh! so many times."

Who was it you made happy? and what did you do for her?"

"It was Aunty, mother - Aunty Wilson, who lives in the house by the I went in there when I went to school, and she said she had been looking out of the window to see the beautiful flowers and the little chitdren plucking them; but she was old and lame, and she couldn't pick them as she used to, and as she had no boy nor girl to pick them for her, she had be content with looking at them from her window. So at roon I went and got all the prettiest ones I could find and carried them to her; and she was so g'ad, and said God would bless me, for I had made one poor heart happy; that the flowers were very sweet; but she was going to a land where there are far sweeter flowers that never fade. Did she mean Par-"Yes, my dear."

"May I get flowers for her every day, mother, and some of those nice ones from our nice little graden, that I may make her happy again?"
"Yes, my child, as often and as many as you wish; and I trust the remembrance of this day may cause you ever to strive to make some heart happy daily, and then it cannot be said you lived wholly in vain." I will try, mother," he said, and his blue eyes filled with tears, tears of mingled sympathy and joy; sympathy for the disconsolate and suffering, and joy that he even could be of me service-little boy that he wasin making earth's weary and lonely hearts happy. Yes, and it was a bles-sed privilege. He had made one heart happy that day; and not one only, for the simple story of that little act of childish thoughtfulness and kindness had made a mother's heart happy also. Did not the brightening eyes, the sweet smile, and the carnest recital, tell his fond mother that his own br. Woods. heart beat lighter, and was happier that night for the little act of kindness he had done? Yes, that simple handful of flowers, gathered in field and by roadside, had made three hearts happy that day. The flowers which caused it might wither, but before that happered one more unfading flower was blossoming in three hearts. and sweetening life with its precious one heart happy each day! Is there one who cannot or who will not strive to do it? There is sunshine enough here are flowers enough—there is by latter a few days before the petient draigns coming. [June 4, 1868-19. perfame enough in this world of ours to make every heart happy, and sweeten every bitter cup, if there be always ready some kind word or act to unlock the avenues there, and open them to the reception of those blessed gifts. If every one would live for this, what a blessed world this would be! a little beaven below - every house a temple of praise, and every heart an exhaustless fountain of joy! Let all live, then, so that each night they may say: "I have made one heart happy to-day."

Hell as it Is.

A correspondent of a Western paper who attended the bondholders convention at Chicago growls at his in treatment. He thus airs himself :-

One of the greatest hotels finally for a trifling consideration, stored your correspondent in a room across the way, in which were thirty two double beds. I shared mine with a fellow Bohemian (as the world foolishly insists on calling us,) whose conscience or supper sat heavily upon him, and who, throughout the night, was constantly engaged in herenlean efforts to turn himself inside out. Sleeping with a live man isn't exactly the thing, at best, but sleeping with a lithe and active fellow who re volves on his own axis all night, while sixty-two strange men are swearing about you, is akin to Bedlam. Our bed was made of crisp prairie hay, 1868 SPRING. 1868 which erackled and tinkled with every turn, like the inside of Geneva musienl box.
