A few summers hence, and the stormy waters of the Mediterranean en-gulfed his weltering body, and breathed their last monotony over his dying

He was a disappointed man, seeking solace in travel and by gratifying his esthetic tastes. But the amenities of lomestic affection, the leveliest of Italian skies, and the classic grandeur of the old Italian cities, had failed to dispel the gloom that overcast his timity, and to place in its stend an airy philosophy of his own. His opinions separated him from the world; he found his philosophy unastication. he found his philosophy unsatisfying; and, without human sympathy, with out a God and the hopes and consolation of religion there was in his heart a perpetual sighing, a longing for something unattained.

His had been a chaplement life.

something unattained.

His had been a checkered life. His atheism had caused him an expulsion from college; his infidelity to the wife of his earlier years had brought her to a suicide's grave; and his impicties, as expressed in his poems, had made him a hapless wanderer among the suicide's grave; and his impicties, as expressed in his poems, had made him a hapless wanderer among his beautiful to the suicide of the suicide made bim a hapless wanderer among mankind. His beautiful child—the idol of his heart, the tair-haired Willie-had pined and died, and been laid away from doting eyes forever amid the mouldering ruins of Rome.
Although not yet thirty years of age, accumulating sorrows had silvered his locks and stolen the freshness from his youthful beauty; and the impres-sion must have crept over him at times that his life was in "the sere and yellow leaf." He had won a sudden and respiendent fame, and been dazzled for a time by its glare; but the charms of poetry had lost much of their early attraction. He once wrote to his wife in the following despondent manner, in these altered

"My greatest comfort would be utterly to desert human society; I would retire with you and our children to a solitary island in the sea; would build a boat, and shut upon my retreat the flood gates of the world. I would read no reviews; I would talk with no authors. If I dared trust my immagination, it would tell me that there are one or two chosen compan-Where two or three are gathered together, the devil is among them."

Clothing. HOW TO SAVE MONEY.

THE times are hard; you'd like to know How you may save your dellars; The way to do it I will show, If you will road what follows. A man who lived not far from here, Who worked hard at his trade, But had a househeld to support That equandered all he made.

I met him onen. Says he, "My friend,
I look thread bear and rengh;
I've trind to get myself a suit,
But can't sare up enough."
Says L my friend, how much have you?
I'll tell you where to go
I get a suit their sound and chaup:
To get a suit their sound and chaup:
To REIZENSTEIN & Co. He took what little he had eared, And went to Beitsautein & Brothers', And there he get a handsome suit, For half he paid to others. Now he is heme, he looks so wall, And their effect is such, That when they take their daily meal, They don't eat half as much.

And now he finds an Saturday night, With all their wants supplied, That he has money left to spend, And some to lay aside. His good ansees, with cheerful emils, He gladly tells to all. If you'd save money, go and buy Your clushes at-REIZENSYEIN'S CLOTHING HALL.
