We read in Holy Rible Writ, The way to treat all erring brothers, And find the very case to fit That which our countrymen new bothers.

There was a fine old gentlemen, Whose son run wild and rioted. Who spent his means : and when he starved, With swins on hosks he dieted. 'Till sick of all such wretched fare,

He started up, and off he ran To seek his father, at his feet To own his faults up, like a man-

His father opened wide his arms, And chaped him warmly to his breast, "My son repents and lives again, I will forgive him all the rest; "Bring forth the best robe for his use," Rings for his hands, shows for his feet,

And bring the fatted calf to kill, And joyfully we all will est." And though the eldest son objected, And thought his father was too kind, When him his father had corrected, No more he freeweed, no longer whimed.
