Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Bing, happy bells, access the snow;
The year it going, let him go:
Ring out the false, ring in the tree.
For these that here we are use.
Ring out the faul of rich and poor,
Ring ou redress to all mankind.

Ring out a slowly dying cause,
And nucleat forms of party strife;
Ring in the notice modes of life,
With sweeter manners, purer laws.

Ring out the want, the care, the sin, Hing out, ring out my mouraful thyms But ring the faller minsted in.

Ring out false pride in phase and blood.
The civic stander and the spite:
Bing in the love of truth and right,
Bing in the common love of good.

You would be surprised to see, sometimes, continued the detective, how people become thieves by the mere habit of handling valuables which are caposed by somebody's carelesaness. exposes by somebody's carelessness. A short time ago a package of bonds to the amount of $40,000 was stolen in A. Shaffer. in the New York city postoffice. They had been sent from Newport, Rhode J. 1. Cotty Island, and were for soldiers' widows' warrants, etc., so that the outcry was a. F. Habina, natural, and it came from all sides The bonds were too bulky to go inside an envelope, so they were tied to the envelope, but this fact wa did not ascertain till we found the thief. The package was put in a red-backed on. Some McFarland velope, signifying a "registered" letter.

First of all comes the clerk of registered fetters—which are always important letters—and him we surrounded with spics for two years, in vair; tor nothing was seen in any place or at any time to give as a wink of evidence that he was the culprit.

The real thief—let me anticipate—was the newspaper sorter came almost one time afterward. The red banked cuvelope turned andermost in the ransacking, and left the wrapper on top, so that the registry clerk mistock it for a covered new spaper. He thorefore left it, and so did successive clerks, till the newspaper sorter came almost. Suddenly we received a dispatch:

Band No. 18,064 has turned up.

We traced it to the New York house of Jay Cooke & Co. It was a smill bond for $100, and the clerk at Cook) 's remembered well that it had been resented by a man named Ramsdil, clerk for a bounty agent in Park Rew, who said he had found it in the Patk.

We mand went back at a wink 'o the fifterto linuspection name of Tis Ramsdell, the boorish newspaper clerk I knew that he had a brother at Eliabeth, and that his brother had a spryson. So I arrested the boy and myself and another special agent went separately to work with him. The boy had been well drilled, and nothing could shake his story that he had found the bond in the Park, while my eolleague tried every means to bring out the truth. Then I went into him.

man; try again? The agent came to the post office with loud complaints of dishonesty there, and the postunas ter asked a detective to investigate the case with the following result:

A son robulto as Faire.

I saw speedily that the emptied and returned letters were superscribed with the left hand. It bothered me to know what object there could be in thus returning the covers of robbery, and was sure that no post office clerk would be so absurd.

I dropped a couple of letters to the claim agent, and in a day or two called upon him.

"Who gets your mail from the post office."

"My son brings it every morning."

"Well, it's your son that is robbing you."

The old man flushed up indigonally:

"My son, sir't that's slander! It is impossible! He is the soul of honor, and my chief assistant."

"Well, it's your want me to examine him?"

"Well, do you want me to examine him?"
