THE REPUBLICAN. CLEARFIELD, PA. WEDNESDAY MORNING, AUGUST 24, 1870. SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

I love to look on a scene like this, Of will and earnest prayer, And my pulse is getting low, For it stirs the blood in an old man's heart.

Upon an examination of the effects of the prisoner, contained in a small leather bag, a small value and a bundle, many things of interest were found.

It seems that, about a week ago, Whitcomb appeared in Saratoga as a Presbyterian minister from Kansas, on a visit east, and had been robbed of his money.

It is a hard saying of Lord Grey that "nation know no chivalry." One might almost believe it true who sees how carelessly a certain class of Americans have come to think and to speak of the saving help extended to our fathers in their hour of sharpest need.

It is exactly ninety-two years ago since the war of this people were made glad by the news which came to Washington, amid the chills and horrors of Valley Forge.

The last that should be given up, in a well organized family, is the regular weekly paper. Times may be hard and money scarce, but in the midst of the greatest financial distress.

It is valuable on account of the information it brings regularly to our doors, and when it goes after elsewhere could not be obtained for ten times the amount of a year's subscription.

It is a well known fact, that when the dream was so bloodily broken, we rejoiced over Democratic victories at Albany; and we sorrowed for Waterloo, though we had no more reason to like the first Napoleon than the third.
