A Wild Cat Under the Bed.

West Hickory, besides being noted for its big wells, dry holes and rattlesnakes, has a new and charming feature of attraction in the vast number of wildcats, or catamounts, that are to be found in the neighboring forest...

Near the headwaters of West Hickory creek lives a humble and upright agriculturist, by the name of Adam Goodman, who after engaging in the perilous occupation of an oil operator on the creek, performed and opened a keno bank, and with the accumulations of several weeks, retired from business, out of a back window (as a police officer entered the front), and purchasing a few acres of soil began to farm it...

This was the situation on Saturday night when from a dreamless sleep he was awakened by an unearthly howl, a crash of glass, and the striking of a "heavy something" upon his breast. At first he thought it must be a horrible nightmare, caused by too rich viands, but when he considered the fact that there were no horses within ten miles of his cabin, and the only supper he had partaken of was a couple of beekwack cakes, such reasoning seemed erroneous. All was quiet and finally thinking it must have been an Oil Creek bed bug on a raid, he dismissed the subject, and was preparing to settle into an all night's sleep, when a scratching was heard beneath the bed. Hastily rising, he jerked on his nightgown, and, dropping on all fours, began to claw beneath the bed after the midnight intruder.

He found it, and in one-fourth of a New York minute all the clothes there were upon him would not have made a bib for a china doll. He finally found himself in the corner partly scalped, with his lower limbs looking as though he had been through a wood-churning machine; while, at this juncture, with a spit and a growl, a catamount disappeared through the open window. Such is the simple tale of Adam Goodman. He now desires to emigrate to some spot where the insects are not so troublesome. His farm is a good one, but he says he cannot stand the cats.—Titusville Herald.

The Wrong Man Punished.

At a famous and fashionable watering place, a gentleman one night was suddenly seized in bed with an excruciating pain in the stomach, which neither brandy, No. 6, nor any other remedy could remove. His wife, after trying a number of things in vain, and having exhausted all her stock of remedies, left her husband's bedside for the purpose of getting a warm application. Guided on her return by a light which she saw shining in a chamber, and which she supposed was the one just left, she softly entered, and was not a little surprised to find her patient in deep slumber. However, thinking he might still be suffering, gently raised the bed clothes, etc., and laid the scalding posset upon a stomach—but not the stomach of her husband—which no sooner touched the body of the person than he, greatly alarmed, and writhing under the torture of the burning application, shouted, "Halloo! Halloo! what in the name of heaven and earth are you about there?" then, with one spring from his bed he made for the door, and rushing down stairs, declared in a frenzy of excitement, that some one had poured a shovel of hot coals upon him.

The woman, overcome with excitement and alarm, gave a frantic scream, which brought her husband hurriedly in from the next room to her rescue. The husband was so much excited, and also so much amused with the singular mistake and the ridiculous position of his better half, that he forgot all his pains; but only next morning he, his wife and trunk left for parts unknown. The punished gentleman still retains the handkerchief, a beautiful linen fabric, with the lady's name on it, which he considers of rare value.

Horrible Accident.—The Stanton Spectator gives the following particulars of the horrible death of two young girls, caused by the explosion of kerosene oil. The victims were daughters of Mr. Edward Heiser, residing several miles west of Churchville.

One or two circumstances connected with this sad affair are worthy of note. The elder alone was burnt by the explosion, and the flames were communicated to the younger while trying to save her sister. The younger after proceeding some distance in the direction in which they ran, her clothes being almost if not wholly burnt from her body, returned to the house to procure a dress, which she carried to Mr. Lightner's; while the elder bore the entire distance the only member of the family when the accident occurred, a child eighteen months old, and on reaching Mr. Lightner's where also was her father, throwing her arms about her father's neck, her first words were: "We're burnt to death, but we have saved the baby." The child escaped without injury.

Don't Know It.—As we passed a party of well dressed young men sitting at a street corner, on Saturday evening, we heard one exclaim—"Saturday night! it is Saturday night!" When the answer came in the affirmative he said—"Why I didn't know it!" He did not know the week was ended—a day of rest coming. We'll wager he had not done a day's work that week. He did not realize as a workingman does, that Saturday brings rest from the week's toil, and renewed vigor for coming duties. He is a loafer, a drone, a consumer. His father and mother, perhaps, have hands blistered and hardened by work; they are the producers, while their son, doted on, is raised in idleness, and dissipation. Of what consolation or support will he be in their old age? If he does not precede them in the grave, he will be to the world, what he is to them now, a burden and a disgrace.

The little girls were heard discussing the war in Europe. They were divided in opinion as to the result, one contending that Prussia would whip, and the other asserting with equal confidence that France would be the victor. At last the champion of Prussia settled the question by an unanswerable argument. "I know," said she, "that the Dutchmen will whip. My father is a Frenchman and my mother is Dutch. They fight every night, and mother always whips."
