GRANMA AL'S DOES.

BY A. H. FOX.

I wants to mend my wagon,
And has to have some salts;
Just a few will fit it well.
With a few more we can call,
The splendiferous old frenzies,
We're making over war;
I wish you'd help us find 'em,
Granma's all done.

My horses are in better form,
She stopped and took her head,
I put her in the stable,
And fed her milk and bread.
The stable's in the parlor;
We're making over war;
I wish you'd let it stay there,
Granma's all done.

It's going to the cornfield,
To ride on Charlie's plow;
I expect he'd like to have me;
I wants to go right along.
One of us is awful,
And when like Charlie when?
I wish you wouldn't bother;
Granma's all done.

I wants some bread and butter;
It's hungry wretched kind;
But I don't mind, cause she's
Came she wouldn't mind.
Put plenty sugar on it;
I tell you what I know;
It's right to put on sugar;
Granma's all done.

The Bright Side.

The Vandalism of the War—Where Lies the Responsibility?

[From the New York Herald.]

The beautiful capital of the civilized world is about to be ruined, and the selfish and unpitying governments of Europe will not raise a finger to prevent this vandalism. Paris and its innumerable art treasures are not to be subjected to a terrible storm of destructive missiles and fire, and no potent voice, no hand, is raised to avert the catastrophe. What a blot this will be upon the boasted civilization of Europe! What a stain upon the history of the great nations of Europe! The monarchs and princes who have been the honored guests of Paris and of the French government and people stand with folded arms coolly looking on this disgraceful spectacle. The hundreds of thousands of ruling, leading and fashionable classes of European nations who reviled the skies and almost fainted upon as their great ally, is now assailed by their press in a scathing style. They bark at him like curs, now he is fallen. The great and friendly French nation is now misrepresented and vilified. But has not England made a mistake? Has she not made a similar mistake to that of insidiously stabbing the American Republic in the time of its distress and struggle for national life? We never expect much from the magnanimity of England, but her own interests ought to have prompted more generous conduct toward France in this crisis. The disturbance of the balance of power in Europe and the undue humiliation of France cannot end well for England. Nor will the persistent hostility of the monarchy and aristocracy to the French republic fail to make the people of England more dissatisfied with their government and more democratic in their aspirations. France may suffer more fearfully still through the selfish abstention of her former friends, and especially through that of England, but the nation cannot be destroyed. It will yet revive, and the day of retribution will come to those who have abandoned her and who ought to have mediated in her behalf.

a treaty of permanent peace. It is prepared to accept sacrifices if the Prussians be too exacting.

But while the belligerents appear unable to solve the difficulty themselves there is a way to do this thru the interposition or mediation of the rest of Europe. The great Powers—England, Russia, Austria and Italy—now could stop the war. And were France not a republican they would, probably, have taken energetic measures to that end before this. Still we might suppose that the statesmen of these nations would see the futility of resisting the progressive ideas and intelligence of the age—would see the folly of fighting the republican sentiment which is growing and spreading over the Continent. At least we might expect they would, in the interests of civilization and for the sake of humanity, make an effort to stop this dreadful and useless effusion of blood. Of all the great Powers England is the most to blame for not acting. She is more advanced in political liberty and approaches nearer a free government. The masses of the English people favor the French republic, and wish their government to interpose to stop the war. Had England recognized the French republic Prussia probably would have been arrested in her devastating career. Had she called upon the other Powers and protested energetically against a continuance of this war for the sake of conquest it would have been closed. But, alas! the evil genius of the British monarchy and aristocracy has influenced Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues. They have forgotten that friendship and entente cordiale which, happily for both countries and Europe, had existed for nearly twenty years. France, the warm and generous ally of Great Britain, is abandoned in the day of her distress. The Emperor Napoleon, the man whom the British landed to the skies and almost fainted upon as their great ally, is now assailed by their press in a scathing style. They bark at him like curs, now he is fallen. The great and friendly French nation is now misrepresented and vilified. But has not England made a mistake? Has she not made a similar mistake to that of insidiously stabbing the American Republic in the time of its distress and struggle for national life? We never expect much from the magnanimity of England, but her own interests ought to have prompted more generous conduct toward France in this crisis. The disturbance of the balance of power in Europe and the undue humiliation of France cannot end well for England. Nor will the persistent hostility of the monarchy and aristocracy to the French republic fail to make the people of England more dissatisfied with their government and more democratic in their aspirations. France may suffer more fearfully still through the selfish abstention of her former friends, and especially through that of England, but the nation cannot be destroyed. It will yet revive, and the day of retribution will come to those who have abandoned her and who ought to have mediated in her behalf.

INFLUENCE OVER ANIMALS.—The horse is like his master, and the dog like his master. A nervous, timid man is almost sure to have a skittish horse, shying at anything, unsteady, and a runaway if he gets a chance. Many a cow is spoiled by lack of patience and quietness in the milker, and the amount of milk depends more upon the milker than the pasture. If a man is afraid of a horse, the animal knows it before he gets into the stable. We have seen the most inoffensive cow in the herd so wrought upon by the nervousness of a green-hand son of Erin, as dexterously to plant her foot in his breast, and send him reeling heels over head. A noisy, boisterous fellow about fattening stables will cause a serious loss in gain of flesh to the animals, so important is quiet when they are digesting their food.
