PASSING AWAY. BY JOHN SHITH, JR.

Go to the woods and fields, Go to the laughing rills, Go to the creaking mills, They only say, "Passing away." See the tree lose its leaves, The farmer gather his sheaves, The rill, as the spring it leaves, "Passing away."

See the roses as they bloom, To sink, alas! how soon, They only say,
"Passing away."

See the youths' hopes and aims. Wrapt in death's dark flames, The grave a victory claims, Only to my, "Passing away." See men of two-score years, liathed in sorrow's tears, Dying in hopes and fears, They only say, "Passing away."

See the aged locks of silver, Nearing the dark, dark river, Going,—gone,—forever, They only say, "Passing away."
