Then rumor caught the flying word, And husy gossip gave it weight, Until the little word became A vehicle of angry hate.

And then the word was winged with fire, Its mission was a thing of pain; For soon it fell like lava drops Upon a wildly tortured brain.

And then another page of life,
With burning, scalding tears was blurred
A lead of care was heavier made,
It added weight, that careless word.

That carcless word, oh! how it seemched
A fainting, bleeding, quivering heart
Twas like a hungry fire that scarched
Through every tender, vital part. How wildly throbbed that aching heart! Deep agony its fountain silred! It calmed—but bitter ashes mark The pathway of that careless word.

The Falls of Minnehaha.

A young friend who has lately been "doing" the Northwest, sends us the following in reference to the above named much celebrated water full which may prove of interest to some of our readers and lead other wanderers who may pass in that direction to make a pop call: I wish you could share with me the pleasures of the occasion, for such beauty as these Falls present can only be seen and felt, not described; however an attempt might be of interest.

The Falls of Minnehaha are situated in a stream of the same name a few miles distant from St. Paul, in the State of Minnesota. The reader will bear in mind that we are now in "the land of the Dacotah's." But the wilderness, alas, where once the red man was want to roam has passed away, and we find instead the landscape dotted with farms. But this is not my theme. I have come to look on the serene face of Laughing Water, to muse on the beauty of Minnehaba. How melodious the sound of this Laughing Water! You do not hear a deafening roar, like that of Niagra, but something similar to the murmer of bees. In gazing at this unequaled beauty, you appear to be asleep to all else that surrounds you; all cares are forgotten, you read sermons in Minnehaha, not dry discourses, but full of poetry, and of power, that enables one to look through nature up to nature's God." Viewing from below, there is a bit of blue sky, a silver-hued sheet of water flowing smoothly over a precipice, and, surrounding all a framework of verdure, kept green by the A rainbow, caused by the rising spray, encircles the base of the Falls, which, in the carcless wanderings of one's mind, would suggest the existence of gold, as we used to think when children; perhaps a golden harp in the waters, upon which mermaids are playing, keeping happy time to playing, keeping happy time to Laughing Water. Long grass, such as you see along meadow streams. fringes the channel, as if to smooth a passage for the water. These Falls have with some truthfulness been likened to the pouring of water from a bowl into a basin. To make the are not grand and overpowering, but simply beautiful. The rocks above arch over, leaving a space below, wide enough for a foot-path behind the Falls. Perhaps the rocks have been blasted out by Hiawatha's mittens. I happenned here on a gala-day. A throng of visitors crown the rocks above; thread the vale below; pass under the Fall; all wearing looks of astonishment and delight. I now think of my fellow traveller, who perhaps if his eye meets this will remember of sitting behind the Fall, gazing, maybe unconsciously, but intently into the waters beneath; perhaps following the fortunes of the with Hiawatha, "Through the woodland and the meadow, Left the old man standing lonely. At the doorway of his wigwam, Heard the Palls of Minnehaha Calling to them from the distance, Crying to them from sale off, "Fare thee well, O Minnehaha."

So do many, if not all, behold in dreaming wonder this most beautiful production of God's band. We now leave, as the fall goes on murmuring, "Pare thee well, O Minnehaha."

Love.-In its first approaches, ere it has assumed any definite character, it is full of light and beauty. Its hid-den agency fills the soul with ineffable pleasure; it tinctures every object with new lustre. We do not ask ourselves why we are happy; we feel we are so, and that is sufficient. The fresh fullness, like new flowers, gives forth a sweetness, delicate and spon-taneous, and the spirit reposes under its influence in a beautitude of which, like the happiness of childhood, it is not conscious till it is past. Descarte's was a free and mighty spirit if ever there was one. When undergoing the fatal attacks of his last sickness, which did not, however, disturb the regular connection of his thoughts, those who heard his last utterances were astonished to hear the geometrician and metaphysician discoursing, not of the sciences which had so much occupied him, but of the greatness of God, and of the misery of man.

How to Save Money.

THE times are hard; you'd like to know How you may save your dollars; The way to do it I will show, If you will read what follows.

A man who lived not far from here, Who worked hard at his trade, But had a household to support That squandered all be made.

I met him once. Says he, "My friend, I look thread bear and rough; I've tried to get myself a suit, But can't save up enough."

Says I, my friend, how much have you?
I'll tell you where to go
To get a suit that's sound and cheap:
To HEIZENSTEIN & Co.

He took what little he had saved, And went to Reiseastein & Brothers', And there he got a handsome suit, For half he paid to others.

Now he is home, he looks so well, And their effect is such, That when they take their duily meal, They don't eat half as much. And now he finds on Saturday night, With all their wants supplied, That he has money left to spend, And some to lay aride.

His good success, with cheerful smile, He gladly tells to all, If you'd save money, go and buy Your clothes at—
