now available, and the brutes being driven off, the poor and almost helpless piece of humanity was drawn out from the place it was fated to never more should enter. He sustained sufficient sensibility to speak to his warm-hearted colleagues a few faint words, praying them not to take him away to receive medical aid, as he knew he was a dead man.

Dr. Bateman in this connection cites a number of curious cases, illustrative of the disease, which go a considerable distance in confirming many of the theories of the phrenologists. He mentions one case in which a man, in consequence of a blow on the head lost all knowledge that he possessed of the Greek language, in which he was a proficient scholar, thus showing that one may have knowledge "knocked out of his head" as well as "knocked into it."

THE FIVE LIONS. were all powerful animals and the unfortunate man on entering the cage noticed that a black-maned African lion, which had only recently as Monday bitten his hand appeared very restive. He consequently fixed his eyes on it, and in this same degree diverted his attention from an Asiatic lion known by the name of Tyrant, against whom he had been cautioned only that morning to keep carefully within his instructions.

HYPOCRISY SCIENTIFICALLY CONSIDERED. Dr. Bateman an eminent English physician, has been devoting himself to a scientific consideration of the subject of hypocrisy. The very common practice saying one thing and meaning the directly opposite, has been familiar to people in all ages and generations of the world.

AN EXAMPLE TO AMERICAN WOMEN. It was noticed by a somewhat close observer at the Executive Mansion, that the ladies who called to pay their respects to Mrs. Grant, and who were a dress of dark, soft, warm-looking material, suitable for Winter wear.

RAILROAD TALK. The following particulars of railroad signals will be interesting: One whistle of the locomotive means "slow brakes;" two whistles, "off brakes;" three whistles, "back up;" continued whistles, "danger;" a continued succession of short whistles is the cattle alarm.

THE ENTHUSIAST. "God may forgive a penitent rebel," said Zach Chandler, the Michigan Senator, the other day, "but I never can." This shows the difference between piety and Radicalism, and reminds us of the story of the temperance lecturer who dodged the record of the marriage at Canada, by saying that he always considered the turning of the water into wine on that occasion as "one of the most indiscreet things Christ ever did."

A MERE TRIFLE. The little discrepancy of some three or four millions of dollars between the amount paid out by France for arms, and the amount received into the Treasury on that account, excites attention; but administration papers say it is a trifle.

CONTESTING TERRITORY. Congress man Low Campbell says he is getting tired of the constant annoyance to which he is subject by certain people in his district insisting upon contesting his seat, and that he will pay no further attention to them. He says, however, that he has firmly decided to prosecute to the full extent of the law, several prominent Republicans in Ohio, whom, he says, he can prove to have procured votes by bribery and corruption in favor of General Schuch, his competitor.

A WIND BAG PUNCTURED. The Rocky Mountain Gazette calls Senator Nye a "blatant loyalist" who was hunting for money and political preferment in the sage brush, when Schurz was in the field. Nye is evidently known to the people about the Gazette.

A STRANGE STORY. As true as the needle to the pole—whenever an open-mouthed layman breaks out down South, set him down as a scallawag or carpet-bagger. Our readers are familiar with the anarchy which has reigned supreme at New Orleans since the past month by two Radical factions. The Great wing is led by Gen. Geo. W. Carter, and the State wing by Governor Warmoth. The history of Grant's right bowler is about as follows:

The Richmond Dispatch inquires about George W. Carter, who is the central figure of the strife of factions in Louisiana, and who is adding new and strange episodes to a life which has already been tragically eventful. Within the memory of the youngest adult amongst us, he was a minister of remarkable influence and fine reputation in the Virginia Conference. Later he was the respected head of an institution of learning in this city, and we can recollect when charges of indiscretion, if not immorality, in his sacred calling, were first brought against him, how indignantly they were repelled by hosts of friends, and how heated became the controversy between the many excellent persons who retained their faith in the minister, and those who are satisfied that his garb was cloaking anything but piety and morality.

Without knowing what was established against Carter, we recollect that he lost his previous high position, and that he left under grave suspicion, he moved South, and left many behind to cling to him as an injured man, and one who would yet triumph over the malice of his enemies. The war came on, and he was head of an academy, successively created into a colonel in Texas by his fervor and eloquence. Shortly after he became a Colonel in the Confederate army, and remained such for some months, but left the service on account of some difficulty with a brother officer. Next there was a great deal of mystery and some stir about a secret mission that Carter had in Richmond; it was evidently that he was to come to become a person of much importance, and was frequently in confidential communication with the Cabinet officers. During the war we never heard of a surmise as to the nature of this scheme, but a few weeks ago while traveling happened to hear all about it.

Carter had in some incomprehensible manner discovered the secret, so jealously guarded by the English Government, of making the ultra-strong gun. He brought his drawings and evidences of their genuineness to Richmond, and convinced Colonel Gorgas, as was the fact, that he had learned the principles. He was after a time given discretionary powers in the premises, sent to New Orleans, formed a company, bought a foundry, procured his imported machinery on a blockading gun, and was just beginning to work when New Orleans fell, ending in heavy losses to the contractors what would have been an immensely profitable speculation. From this time to the surrender his history is rather obscure, except that he distinguished himself in a battle near Little Rock, Arkansas, and was then known to have left the army again.

After the war, he started in political life in Texas, did not succeed, subsided, and next appears in New Orleans, where, after a few months of utter debauchery, he developed into a furious Radical, and was soon recognized as a man of brilliant abilities, skillful in the management of men, and dangerous from the use of sarcasm, which marked his character. Here, in haranguing the negroes, his former pupil experience proved of great use, and he continued to grow in importance until now he is a power in the State, wielding one wing of the Republican party with mastery ability, and being, says our informant, the only man of his faction with at once brains and nerve enough to lead a crowd of ignorant, uneducated Louisiana against Grant. But for his habits, he might be anything but a chouse, but he has sunk to beastliness in all manners of dissipation. By corrupt connection with railroads and other schemes before the Legislature, he has, in the last year, made enormous sums of money; but squanders thousands at the gaming table at night, wanders about the streets in a bloated, and spends his time ordinarily among the lowest of the low characters who form the demimonde of New Orleans. He is reported to have lost all sense of self-respect, and to revel in the openness of his offenses against society and morality. "He is brave, has a fine mind, is ready in resource, fluent in speech, popular in manners, and the most accomplished and cultured gentleman in Louisiana," said his acquaintance; "but his appetites control him, and he will find the bottom."

And this is the true end of a man who is remembered here as a minister of Christ and an instructor of youth. We leave it to others to draw the moral from the sad story. The above is from the Petersburg (Va.) Progress. The editors of the latter are well known to one of the oldest and best families of Louisiana county, Virginia. He has brothers now living in that county, who are ranked among its best citizens. All of them are prominent in politics, and all are Democrats now and were Democrats before the war. "We have heard the way Geo. W. Carter preached many sermons in few minutes ever equalled his power in the pulpit. Eloquent, chaste, logical and very tender, his style appealed to all classes of people, and no matter how or where he preached, George Carter—as he was familiarly called—was always sure to have good congregations, and his preachings was not without results. In those years—1857 to 1859—there was a reproach upon his ministerial character, and he was sorely beloved by the people of his mother county; none of whom ever had the most remote suspicion that their "idol was brazen." Now, they who trusted and honored him can say, "How art thou fallen, O Lucifer, son of the morning!"—Atlanta Star.

RICH.—The career of Governor Scott, of South Carolina, is one of great encouragement to young men. The Louisville Courier-Journal says the Governor was once a cooper, and afterwards a quack doctor, in a now worth six million dollars, all of which he has made since the war by an abominable, straight-forward prosecution of the exalted profession of carpet-bagger.

We hate some persons because we do not know them, and we will not know them because we hate them.
