Fisks of Other Grades.

The bad pre-eminence of ambition and reckless men, ambitious of notori-ety, seems almost to shake weak faith human justice. Their success in evil deeds tempts the doubting almos to the complaint of the Hebrew lyrist, that the clean and conscientious "wash their hands in vain." The extent of the influence of these bad examples can scarcely be over rated. But success can not be assured even to the audacious in wickedness; and when a mad and wicked career is closed in wiolent death, or in living ignominy, the better judgment of the world as-serts itself. A gross offender, who, through life defiles censure and buys flattery, who poisons the course of justice and purchases immunity for audacious crime, must sooner or later WEAVER & BETTS reach "his own place" in the judgent of his survivors. In the case of James Fisk the verdict of the world has been as sudden and universal as it is stern and just. Prominence in successful iniquity demanded this sweeping and equally marked condem-nation. But if we should infer that his crimes are confined to his class we should ignore the fact that the evil example of him and such as him poisons all classes of society. Fisks, on a less showy scale, and operating on a smaller circle, flourish and die, or fade HATS & CAPS, away into the penitentiary, with only local fame or the limited celat of the police and court reports and their

A long private experi-ense has attested its nature which requires concealment, is in danger. The young woman who suffers the acquaintance of persons, whether of her own sex or the other, of whom she even distrusts that her guardians would disapprove, is throw-ing away the best of her defences.— Vice, open and declared in its own place, can masquerade amid virtues in attractive guise. The great weakness of civilization is the perfection of hypocrisy; evil concealed under such well of attractiveness, as to give it the power which an open for cannot wield.

Whatever political theorists may say, the destiny of the human race is in the hands of the women; and their citadel and throne is home. No place deserves the name of home where woman is not seated in her pure and womanly character. And wherever woman dwells in her honest and chaste relations, she is in advance of her male companions-husbands, brothers, children, in whatsoever is honest and of good report.
